LONDON, JULY 27, 1850.

GREAT and not altogether unreasonable clamour has been raised by the refusal of the Attorney-General to sign the information proposed by certain parties to be filed against the Commissioners of Woods and Forests, to restrain the erection of buildings in Hyde Park for the Industrial Exhibition of 1851. That the Attorney-General is the proper officer to file an information when the complaint is by or on behalf of the public, and that he has authority to sign, or to refuse to sign, an information, is not doubted by any person acquainted with the principles on which the machinery of the Court of Chancery is put in motion. But, then, that authority is not a mere arbitrary authority, but one that is to be exercised upon certain fixed principles, in the same manner as the authority of the Chancellor is to be exercised; and as, in the case of the Chancellor, if he were to decide contrary to settled rules or principle, although his decision, if unreversed, would be binding on the particular parties, yet men would correctly say that it was, judicially speaking, a bad decision, and one that subsequent Chancellors would not follow,—so in the case of the Attorney-General, if he refuses to sign an information upon grounds which are not, according to legal principle and practice, sufficient, although he is not obnoxious to punishment, yet he is obnoxious to the assertion that his decision is a bad decision—bad, not in the sense of its being merely inexpedient, but bad in the same sense in which we use the term in speaking of a decision said not to be law.

Of the grounds on which the Attorney-General has refused to sign the information against the erection of buildings in Hyde Park, we, in common with the rest of the public, are only informed through the reasons given by that officer himself, and which have found their way into print in the public journals.

VOL. XIV.

C C

If the Attorney-General had simply refused his fiat without reasons, as there are many good reasons why an information should not be sanctioned, no one would have been able to say, that in the particular case the Attorney-General had come to an unsound conclusion, and we should have been bound to infer that the judicial authority of the Attorney-General had been exercised upon sufficient grounds; but as he has given reasons, we are to conclude that those which he has given are the best that he possesses; and, if they can be shewn to be bad reasons, we are at liberty to infer that the judgment is an erroneous one.

The following are the reasons stated to have been given by the Attorney-General:—

"I have in this matter a duty of a judicial nature to perform. The object of the information is to call in question the exercise of the discretion of the Woods and Forests in the management of a part of the property of the Crown. The information states that what the Commissioners of Woods and Forests are about to do is illegal, and injurious to the public. The information states no facts which, in my opinion, establish either of these propositions. But even if there were a question as to the legality, the Attorney-General is bound to judge whether it is for the interest of the public to litigate the question. Cases may be conceived, and, indeed, not unfrequently arise, in which the letter of the law has been violated, and in which the Court has, nevertheless, required the Attorney-General to consider whether he would allow an information to proceed complaining of such violation, even where the Attorney-General had already, in his discretion, allowed the information to be filed, and where, if the information had proceeded, the Court could have done no other than enforce the strict right. The discretion of the Attorney-General is interposed to prevent this mischief; and his exercise of that discretion is purely an exercise of a judicial function, and as such I have exercised it to the best of my ability.

"In the present case the sense of what is for the interest of the public, with relation to what the Commissioners of Woods and Forests propose to do, has been unequivocally expressed by a vote of the House of Commons. It would, in my opinion, be an improper measure, on the part of the Attorney-General, if, in the exercise of his discretion, and acting on behalf of the public, he were to sanction a proceeding directly at variance with that vote. If any private right were affected by my decision it would be a different matter; but I have the satisfaction of knowing that no private right of any individual or individuals can be withdrawn from the consideration of any Court, or in any manner affected by my refusal to sanction this information."

Now, the first reason, as we collect, is, that the information states no facts which, in the opinion of the Attorney-General, establish, that what the Commissioners of Woods and Forests are about to do is illegal, and injurious to the public. This is, in effect, a species of demurrer to the information; and what the Attorney-General is here asserting authority to do is, not to say that the information, whether sustainable or not, is improper, for some reason, to be filed, but that it ought not to be filed because it cannot be sustained on the merits. He first decides, in effect, that the information would be dismissed if heard, and thence concludes that it ought not to be filed. Now, it has been heard that the Attorney-General would refuse to sanction an information because it was scandalous; because, whether successful or not, it would inevitably be injurious to the objects of it; or because, whether ultimately necessary or not, the case alleged was one more proper to be primarily attempted on behalf of an individual subject: but what lawyer has ever heard of the Attorney-General usurping the functions of the Chancellor, and deciding that a demurrer would lie to the information, and therefore that it ought not to be filed?

The next point to be observed in the Attorney-General's reasons is the allegation, that, if there were a question as to the legality, the Attorney-General is bound to judge whether it is for the interest of the public to litigate the question—a proposition, the correctness of which lawyers will not dispute; and here in particular, if the Attorney-General had given no reason for the exercise of his judicial discretion, it must have been assumed that he exercised it on sufficient grounds. But he does give his reason, and that is, that the sense of what is for the interest of the public, with relation to what the Commissioners of Woods and Forests are about to do, has been expressed by a vote of the House of Commons; and the Attorney-General thinks it would be an improper exercise of his judicial discretion, if, acting on behalf of the public, he were to sanction a proceeding directly at variance with that vote. Therefore the Attorney-General, studiously asserting that his function is judicial—that is, that it ought to be exercised by the aid of his own sole judgment, unbiassed by any considerations except those drawn from legal principle or precedent—avowedly surrenders it to a political body, and guides it by a vote of the House of Commons.

Supposing for a moment that such an exercise of his discretion is judicial, let us look whether there ever was any vote of the House of Commons on the subject. What the Attorney-General is discussing, and that with reference to which he leans on a vote of the House of Commons, is, whether it is for the interest of the public to litigate the question of legality—a question which never was before the House at all. What the House of Commons expressed an opinion upon was the convenience of the selection of site for the proposed exhibition; on that, no doubt, the House expressed a strong opinion, but it did so wholly without reference to whether the proposed erections would be legal or not, and without any materials before it to decide whether, assuming any doubt to exist of the legality, it would be for the interest of the public to have that question first decided. It is not to be assumed that the House would have voted for crushing an inquiry into the question, whether an act which a branch of the Government was about to do, and which would produce irreparable injury if wrong, was or was not contrary to law. At any rate, the House never did pass any such vote; and the vote which actually was passed, does not apply at all to the question on which the Attorney-General relies to it as a reason for his judicial conclusion.

But supposing that the vote of the House had the effect which the Attorney-General attributes to it, would it afford a sound legal reason for the use made of it by the Attorney-General? The question which that officer had to consider, in his own stated view of it, is, whether it is for the interest of the public to litigate the legality of the acts proposed to be done. The Attorney-General acts on behalf of the Crown, as representing the public; not representing it as it is represented by the House of Commons, a body which no constitutional lawyer ever understands as completely representing the whole public; but representing those interests which are not represented in either House of Parliament; and, constitutionally speaking, representing the public more properly in antagonism to the House of Commons, than in aid of it. The Attorney-General, as such, acts quite independently of the House of Commons—he protects, on behalf of the Crown, those whom the House of Commons neither protects nor represents; and we conceive, that, in the exercise of his judicial discretion, he could not allow a vote of the House of Commons to influence his judgment; it was evidence not properly before him; it was evidence of the opinion of the very portion of the public between which and the rest of the Queen's subjects the Crown stands, and as against which it is the express function of the Crown, through its officer, the Attorney-General, to see that no wrong is done to that portion of the people or those public interests, of which the Crown is the representative.

Lastly, when the Attorney-General justifies his decision by the circumstance that it affects no private right, we apprehend that such a statement is quite beside the question. That he does not affect any private vate right is no legal reason for refusing to permit the litigation of a claim of public right, if that claim be otherwise fit to be litigated.

Looking, then, at the reasons given by the Attorney-General for his decision; perfectly admitting that his authority is judicial, and to be exercised on judicial grounds; inferring, from his putting forth specific reasons, that they are the best that have occurred to his mind, we assert, that on this occasion his decision cannot be supported upon any principle of constitutional law.

As the Attorney-General, thinking it a fit case to give reasons, has not referred to any precedent, we are to infer that he has found none. The only precedent that has been quoted in support of the present decision is the refusal of the Attorney-General to sign an information in the case of Squire v. Campbell, (1 My. & C. 459). We believe the ground of that refusal was, that the case was purely one of contract, and therefore fit to be litigated by bill, and not either requiring or proper for the interference of the Attorney-General. At any rate, a reference to the case, as reported, will shew that such was its nature. It is, therefore, no authority at all for the decision of the Crown officer in the present case.

EFFECT OF THE NON-REGISTRATION OF A WILL WITHIN SIX MONTHS.

SIR E. SUGDEN, in his Treatise on Vendors and Purchasers, p. 987, 11th ed., has the following statement as to the effect of the Registry Acts for Middlesex and Yorkshire:—

"All devises by will shall be adjudged fraudulent and void against subsequent purchasers or mortgagees, unless a memorial of such will be registered within the space of six calendar months after the death of the devisor or testatrix dying in Great Britain, or within the space of three years after his or her death dying upon the sea, or in parts beyond the seas. Wills registered within the time allowed by the act will prevail over even a prior registered conveyance, but no time is limited within which a memorial of a will must be registered. It may, therefore, be registered at any time, where there is no adverse title under a prior registered conveyance; and there is no weight in an objection which has lately been made, that the estate descends to the heir-at-law if the will be not registered within the periods above specified."

The objection here alluded to is not correctly stated. It is, that a title under the will may be defeated by a conveyance by the heir to a purchaser for valuable consideration, without notice of the will, if the will is not registered within the time mentioned in the act. As against the heir himself and persons claiming under him, without valuable consideration or with notice, it is of course agreed that the will must prevail.

The intention of the framers of the acts may, perhaps, be guessed at, but it is impossible to find in any of the acts a clear expression of any reasonable intention with respect to wills.

The act for Middlesex (7 Ann. c. 20) enacts (sect. 1) that a memorial of all deeds and conveyances executed after the 29th September, 1709, and of all wills and devises in writing of testators dying after that day, and affecting any hereditaments in Middlesex, "may be registered in such manner as is hereinafter directed; and that every such deed or conveyance that shall at any time after the said day be made and executed shall be adjudged fraudulent and void against any subsequent purchaser or mortgagee for valuable consideration, unless such memorial thereof be registered as by this act is directed, before the registering of the memorial of the deed or conveyance under which such subsequent purchaser or mortgagee shall claim; and that every such devise by will shall be adjudged fraudulent and void against any subsequent purchaser or mortgagee for valuable consideration, unless a memorial of such will be registered at such times and in such manner as is hereinafter directed."

"Subsequent" must here mean subsequent to the death of the testator; as, in the event of there being no registry at all, there is no other period to which it can relate.

The act, then, "for settling and establishing a certain method, with proper rules and directions, for registering such memorials," provides for the appointment and duties of a registrar, the form, contents, and authentication of memorials, &c.

Sect. 8 enacts, "that all memorials of wills that shall be registered in manner as aforesaid within the space of six months after the death of every respective devisor or testatrix dying within the kingdom of Great Britain, or within the space of three years after the death of every respective devisor or testatrix dying upon the sea, or in any parts beyond the seas, shall be as valid and effectual against subsequent purchasers as if the same had been registered immediately after the death of such respective devisor or testatrix; anything herein contained to the contrary thereof in anywise notwithstanding."

Sect. 9 gives further time in case of concealment, suppression, or contesting of a will, or other inevitable difficulty, if (in case of a known impediment) a memorial of the impediment is entered within two years, or in case of a testator dying abroad, four years.

And by sect. 10, in case of concealment, "any purchaser or purchasers shall not be disturbed or defeated in his or their purchases, unless the will be actually registered within five years after the death of the devisor or testatrix."

These are the material enactments with respect to wills; and, if it is evident from the general scheme of the act that its framers did not understand what they were meddling with, it is equally evident that, in these particular enactments, they did not know what they were saying.

The literal meaning of the principal clause is so absurd, that every exertion would be made to escape from it. But the difficulty arises from an incompleteness in the scheme, and not from a mere error in the language. The expressed meaning cannot be rejected without substituting not only a different meaning, but also additional provisions, of which the act affords no hint.

Sir E. Sugden's statement, that "no time is limited by the act within which a will must be registered," seems to be inaccurate; for if it is necessary to register a will at all, the act certainly, in terms, prescribes a period within which it must be done. In one sense registry is not prescribed by the act at all. It says, that memorials "may be registered in such manner as is hereinafter directed;" that is to say, that if it is thought fit to register, the directions contained in the act are to be observed. "Direction" here means a regulation, and not a command. When, therefore, the act says, that every such devise by will shall be adjudged fraudulent and void, unless a memorial be registered at such times (in the plural) and in such manner as is hereinafter directed, it means, that if the provisions in the act contained as to the manner of registering wills, and the times for doing it, (extended times being allowed in special cases), are not observed, purchasers from the heir are not to be disturbed by the devisee.

The only clauses which say anything as to the time for registering a will are the 8th, 9th, and 10th, already cited; and it is, therefore, to these clauses that the 1st section refers, as directing the times of registering. The meaning probably was, to provide, in ordinary cases, a period of six months from the death of an owner of land, within which it should be unsafe for a purchaser to deal with his heir, so that registry of the will on the last day of the six months should be equivalent to registry at the moment of the testator's death, as against intermediate purchasers from the heir. The means taken to attain this end are not remarkably apt. If it had been enacted that no purchaser from the heir within six months from the testator's death should prevail against the devisee, the object would have been gained; but why the title of a person buying from the heir in March should be good if the devisee does not register before the end of May, and bad if he does register in May, is not obvious.

Granting that it was at least part of the intent of the 8th section to suspend all dealings with an heir, by way of purchase or mortgage, on the faith of an intestacy, for a period of six months from the death of the ancestor, the 9th and 10th sections seem to render the 8th nugatory, for those sections allow a period of two years in cases of contest, and of five years in cases of suppression, for registering: so that no one dealing with the heir, on the assumption that there is no will, can be safe until after the lapse of five years from the testator's death; and the period of six months offered by the 8th section is a mere delusion. In the act for the North Riding, (8 Geo. 2, c. 6), some attempt appears to have been made to avoid this discrepancy, though not with entire success.

The same observation that was made on the 8th section may be repeated with respect to the 10th—that, if it refers to purchasers prior to the registry of the will, it does seem very absurd that the result of an ejectment, brought within twenty years from the testator's death against a purchaser from the heir, should depend upon the registry or non-registry of the will at a time when the registry, if effected, would be too late, the mischief to be prevented by it having been done.

As between a purchaser from the heir and a devisee who does not register until after the expiration of the time allowed by the 8th, 9th, and 10th sections, and also after the purchase, it is agreed that the purchaser from the heir has a better title. As this can only be under the enactment in the 1st section, the times mentioned in the 8th, 9th, and 10th sections must be "the times hereinafter directed," to which the 1st section refers. But the 1st section is general, and not confined to the case here put; and in all other cases, therefore, of contest between the devisee and a purchaser from the heir, these must be taken to be "the times hereinafter directed."

The difficulty is to acquiesce in that construction when it leads to the hardship of preferring a purchaser from the heir to a devisee who has actually registered before the date of the purchase, though after the time allowed. But we cannot find in the act any provision in favour of the devisee in such case. As between two conflicting conveyances, the act says that priority of registration shall determine the right. As between the devisee and a purchaser from the heir, it says that registration within a certain time from the testator's death shall be the test. There is nothing in the act as to priority of registration in such cases; and to apply such a test to them would be to make, and not to interpret, an act of Parliament.

Still less (if possible) is there any sanction in the act for Sir E. Sugden's suggestion, that registration of the will after the six months will defeat the title under a prior unregistered conveyance from the heir. The act does not say a word as to the registration of the conveyance by which the devisee is to be defeated.

As between a purchaser from the heir and a subse- quent purchaser from the devisee, however, registration seems to be material, by the express terms of the act; for though, by the non-registry of the will, the devise is void as against the heir's vendee, a subsequent purchaser from the devisee is a purchaser within the meaning of the provisions as to the registration of conveyances; and though by his conveyance simply he gets nothing, yet by his conveyance and prior registration together he gets a good title. In the case of a fraudulent conveyance to a second purchaser, without notice of the first, the conveyance, standing alone, is a nullity; but the act regards it as a conveyance for the purpose of registration, and if first registered it becomes operative. Now, the conveyance by a devisee, whose title, by non-registry of the will, has failed as against a purchaser from the heir, is certainly not a greater nullity than the conveyance by a person who has already conveyed all his estate; and a purchaser claiming under such a conveyance, made after a sale by the heir, is a subsequent purchaser, within the general provision as to the registration of conveyances, and, if he registers first, is entitled to priority. That he does not claim under a conveyance from the same person who conveyed to his adversary is immaterial; his vendor is, like a vendor who has already conveyed away his estate, a person who could make a good title if the prior unregistered conveyance were out of the way.

There is, however, authority for a different conclusion. In Honeycomb v. Waldron, (Str. 1063), Lord Hardwicke, at Nisi Prius, held that the registry of a mortgage, and a subsequent assignment of a lease, did not make amends for the non-registry of the lease itself; for the act says, the deed under which the party claims, with the witnesses' names, shall be registered; and of this a subsequent purchaser can have no notice by the bare registry of the assignment. On this Sir Edward Sugden observes, that the intention of the act is defeated if the register does not contain a continuous chain of title. Now, if the meaning of the act is, that a will must be registered within a certain time, if at all, a purchaser, knowing the time allowed, would confine his search in the testator's name to that period; and, on the principle of Lord Hardwicke's decision, ought not to be affected by a will registered at a later time, though before his own purchase. Still less ought a purchaser from the heir to be affected by a prior registered conveyance from the devisee, if the will has not been registered at all.

However this may be, the act seems to afford to a purchaser from the devisee no protection against subsequent purchasers from the heir, when the will was not registered in due time; for the priority gained by registration of a conveyance is only given as against antecedent purchasers.

The acts establishing the registries in Yorkshire (2 & 3 Ann. c. 4; 5 & 6 Ann. c. 18; 6 Ann. c. 88; 8 Geo. 2, c. 6) differ in some particulars from the act for Middlesex, and also among themselves. The provisions as to concealed and contested wills are different. By the act for the North Riding, (8 Geo. 2, c. 6), every devise is declared void against any subsequent purchaser or mortgagee, plaintiff or cognisee, for or upon valuable consideration, unless a memorial of such will be registered in such manner as is hereinafter directed. This, probably, would be held to be confined to judgments, statutes, and recognisances given by way of security, and would not be extended to judgments recovered in adverse suits.

In the act for the West Riding, the memorial of a will is required to be executed by "one of the devisees, his guardians or trustees;" so that after the death of all the devisees, registration according to the terms of the act would be impossible. In the other acts the representatives of devisees are mentioned.

The principal difference, however, is, that the words

"at such times," which are in the 1st section of the Middlesex act, do not appear in the corresponding clauses of the Yorkshire acts. But as those acts, like the Middlesex act, contain clauses allowing a certain time for the registry of wills in certain cases, and declare that such registry shall be "a sufficient registry within the meaning of this act," and enact that in case of suppression or concealment of a will no purchaser shall be disturbed, unless the will be actually registered within a certain time, the result appears to be the same. It is plainly the meaning of those acts, that a purchase from the heir, while the will is unregistered, shall be postponed to the devisee, if the will is afterwards registered in due time; and it is not said that registry after the time appointed shall defeat a purchaser subsequent to the registry, or a prior purchaser whose conveyance is unregistered.

The effect of these difficulties in the construction of the Registry Acts is to render titles under wills which have not been registered in due time (a precaution more frequently omitted than observed) unmarketable, without the concurrence of the heir.

ORDER IN CHANCERY.

Lord Chancellor TAUBO has issued the following Order:—

In the Matter of the Suitors of the High Court of Chancery.

Whereas it is proper that the accounts kept by the Accountant-General of the said Court should be examined and compared, in order to settle the same; and whereas it will require considerable time to perfect such examination, and it is necessary that a time should be appointed for closing the books of accounts of the said Accountant-General for the purposes aforesaid, his Lordship doth order that the books of the said Accountant-General be closed from and after Monday, the 19th day of August next, to Monday, the 28th day of October next, in order to adjust the accounts of the suitors with the books kept at the Bank; and that during that time no draft for any money, or certificate for any effects under the care and direction of the said Court, be signed or delivered out by the said Accountant-General, or any stocks or annuities accepted or transferred by him relating to the suitors of the said Court; and that no purchase, sale, or transfer be made by the said Accountant-General, unless the order, request, or registrar's certificate be left at his office on or before Monday, the 12th day of August next; and that no order for the payment of any money out of court, which may be then in court, be received at the Accountant-General's office after Tuesday, the 13th day of August next; and to the end that the suitors may have notice hereof, and apply to the Court as there shall be occasion, to have money paid to them out of the Bank or Stocks, or annuities transferred to them, before the said 19th day of August next, his Lordship doth order that this Order be affixed up in the several offices belonging to the said Court.

MASTER IN CHANCERY.—The Lords Commissioners for the custody of the Great Seal have appointed James Atter, Gent., of Stamford, Lincolnshire, to be a Master Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

MEMBERS RETURNED TO SERVE IN PARLIAMENT.—Sir Robert Peel, Bart., for the borough of Tamworth, in the room of the Right Hon. Sir Robert Peel, Bart., deceased; The Hon. William Owen Stanley, for the city of Chester, in the room of Sir John Jervis, Knight, who has accepted the office of Steward of her Majesty's Chiltern Hundreds.

LONDON, AUGUST 3, 1850.

THE County Court Extension Bill has received some material amendments in the Lords, and it now appears that they will be adopted by the Commons. A concurrent jurisdiction with the superior tribunals is to be exercised by the county courts in cases involving amounts between 20*l.* and 50*l., (except in such cases as are excepted by sect. 58 of stat. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95); (sect. 1); and even such excepted cases, together with those in which the sum sought to be recovered shall exceed 50*l.*, may be tried in the county court by consent of the parties. (Clause D.)

An appeal is allowed to any of the superior Courts of common law at Westminster, from the "determination or direction of the county court in point of law, or upon the admission or rejection of any evidence," in any cause of the amount† to which jurisdiction is given by this act, if, within ten days after such determination or direction, notice of appeal be given to the other party, and security be given to answer the costs of the appeal, and also, if the defendant be appellant, to answer the amount of the judgment. For the purpose of hearing such appeals, two puisne judges of one of the superior courts are to sit out of term, and the said Court of Appeal may either order a new trial on such terms as it thinks fit, or may order judgment to be entered for either party; and such order shall be final, unless the Court direct the same matter to be stated before another Court, whose decision shall be final. (Clause A.)* Such appeal is to be in the form of a case agreed upon by the parties, or (in the event of their being unable to agree) it is to be settled by the judge of the county court. It is then to be transmitted to the rule department of the Master's office of the Court appealed to. (Clause B.)

Henceforth it will be unnecessary to enter a suggestion to deprive the plaintiff of costs, where he recovers in a superior court a sum under 20*l.* in actions ex contractu, or 5*l.* in actions ex delicto; but he will have judgment to recover such sums only, and no costs, except in case of judgment by default†, (sect. 13); but the judge at the trial may still certify, so as to entitle the plaintiff to costs, (sect. 14); and if the plaintiff satisfy the court or a judge that the action was brought for a case in which concurrent jurisdiction is given to the superior Courts by the 128th section of stat. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95‡, or for which no plaint could have been

* This clause is ambiguous in several respects. Is there to be a Court of Appeal in as well as out of term? What is the meaning of the words, "and such order shall be final, unless the Court shall direct the same matter to be stated before one or other of the Courts to which he or they respectively belong?" If they mean the Court of two judges out of term, the words should be, "to which the said two puisne judges, or one of them, belong."

† Why is this excepted? One of the evils under the former act was, that a defendant was compelled to defend an action until verdict, in order to deprive the plaintiff of costs.

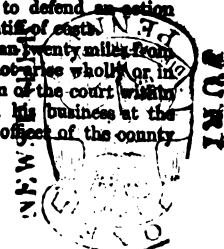

‡ Viz. where the plaintiff dwells more than twenty miles from the defendant, or the cause of action did not arise wholly or in some material point within the jurisdiction of the court within which the defendant dwells or carries on his business at the time of the action brought, or where any object of the county

* Viz. ejectment; actions in which title to any hereditaments, or toll, fair, market, or franchise, shall be in question; or validity of devise, bequest, or limitation under any will or settlement may be disputed; or for any malicious prosecution, libel, slander, crim. con., seduction, or breach of promise of marriage.

† Quære, will this apply to causes which, although not exceeding 20*l.*, were excepted by sect. 58 of stat. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, but which may, by this bill, be tried in the county court by the consent of the parties?

entered in any such county court, or that the cause was removed by certiorari*, he may recover his costs. (Sect. 15).

The fees to be taken by barristers and attorneys, in cases to which this act applies†, are regulated by the 6th section. Where the debt claimed does not exceed 35*l.*, the attorney's fee is not to exceed 1*l.* 10*s.*, and in other cases it is not to exceed 2*l.* In no case is a fee exceeding 2*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.* to be allowed for employing a barrister; and the expense of employing either counsel or attorney is not to be allowed, except by order of the judge. No provision is made for exclusive audience, or even for pre-audience, of the Bar; barristers and attorneys will therefore be placed on precisely the same footing as regards advocacy, and the only difference will be in the amount of the fees which are to be taken.

The remaining clauses of the act are comparatively immaterial; they provide for confessions of debts after plaintiff has been entered, and enable payment thereof to be enforced on such conditions as may be agreed upon, as if judgment had been given to that effect in the county courts, (sects. 9, 10); for costs to be paid to the defendant, if the plaintiff does not appear, (sect. 12); for the prevention of second suits for the same cause, by imposing the penalty of treble costs on the offending party, (Clause E.); and for the protection of the officers of the county courts, (Clauses F. and G.)

So much of sect. 107 of stat. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, as requires a landlord, where rent is in arrear for premises wherein goods have been taken in execution, to state, in writing, the terms of the holding, is repealed, and it will be sufficient for him to state, in writing, the amount of the rent claimed, and the time in respect of which it is claimed. (Clauses H. and I.)

Writs of prohibition may be granted in vacation as well as in term. (Clause J.) In default of sufficient appointment of an umpire, on submission to arbitration by landlord and tenant, a county court judge may appoint one. (Clause K.)

The act is not to take away the power of the judges of the superior Courts to hold defendants to bail in actions commenced in the superior Courts; and while orders for that purpose are in force, the provisions of the act are not to apply to such actions.

THE FIRST REPORT OF THE REGISTRATION AND CONVEYANCING COMMISSION.

THIS Report is signed by Lords Langdale and Beaumont, and Messrs. Ker, Coulson, and Frere. The other two commissioners, Messrs. Humphry and Broderip, in a separate paper, state that they differ from their colleagues, in being unable to approve of public maps as the basis of an index to the register, and that they think the working of any plan of registration should be investigated in greater detail than has been done by the present commission, before it is recommended for adoption. They promise a more detailed explanation of their views when the second report, on "the simplificacourt shall be a party, except in respect of any claim to any goods and chattels taken in execution of the process of the court, or the proceeds or value thereof.

* But by Clause C. no certiorari is to be allowed.

tion of the forms of conveyance," appears. The report of the majority is confined to the subject of registration, and, if Mr. Wilson's plan had never been proposed, would have been perfectly satisfactory; for between Mr. Wilson's plan and that of the late Mr. Duval, the adoption of which, with some improvements, is recommended in the Report before us, the choice certainly lies. Mr. Wilson's evidence is to be found in the appendix to the Report, where he explains his plan in minute detail, and, as the commissioners truly say, "with great ingenuity and ability." Notwithstanding this, no opinion as to the merits of the plan is expressed in the Report. The commissioners say, that, "to the establishment of Mr. Wilson's system, it is essential that there should be a registration of title, which is invariably and certainly to vest the legal ownership in a registered owner—a person in existence, and ascertained. . . . The reasons which have prevented us from entering into the question of the expediency of judicial registration, apply to the plan of Mr. Wilson. The object sought to be accomplished—a registration which is necessarily to transfer a title—is to be attained by altering existing titles, by changing the character of existing rights, and by shortening the periods during which they may be asserted. As it is not within the limits of our commission to suggest the extensive alterations of the law which would be required to give effect to such a plan, if we had been prepared to recommend it, we have not thought it necessary to consider whether the proposed machinery would secure the benefits which are sought, or whether the advantages, if attained, would outweigh the inconvenience incident to the change."

We are sorry to see a report of such ability stultified by the confession, that, for aught the commissioners know, they may have been, during the three years of their incubation, sitting upon the wrong egg. If Mr. Wilson's plan, involving or not involving any extensive alterations of the law, is preferable to that recommended by the commissioners, the latter ought not to have been recommended; and if the commissioners felt themselves precluded by the terms of their commission (to inquire "whether the burthens on land can be diminished by the establishment of an effective system for the registration of deeds and the simplification of the forms of conveyance") from investigating the merits of the former plan, they ought, in such a dilemma, to have applied for an extension of their powers.

The practical importance of the omission is not, perhaps, very great; for though, after much hesitation, we are convinced that Mr. Wilson's plan involves the true principle by which the transfer of title to real property ought to be governed, it differs so widely in form, and to some extent in substance, from our present system, that it is not likely to make its way through the resisting medium of prejudice and habit for many years. Mr. Duval's plan, cleared, by the adoption of a public map, from the only obscurity or difficulty which it presented to ordinary apprehensions, has now a fair chance of being adopted, and will form an excellent preparation for a more complete system on Mr. Wilson's principle, when that principle is more generally understood.

We shall shortly give an account, in some detail, of the more important parts of the Report and the evidence; at present we have only time to state briefly the general nature of the commissioners' proposal.

The safe custody of deeds and wills relating to real property, and the proof of their contents, are to be provided for by the deposit of the originals and the delivery of office copies. Acts of law affecting real estates, such as judgments, bankruptcy, &c., are also to be registered.

The register will thus, after it has been in operation a sufficient time, contain in detail all the information necessary to ascertain the state of the title to any given property, with the exception, perhaps, of latent heirships and wills—cases for which it is difficult to make a perfectly satisfactory provision. To make this mass of information available, an efficient index must be kept, and the making of such an index is the only real difficulty involved in the inquiry. The experience of existing registries shews that an index of names alone is utterly useless. The only alternative is an index of estates. Each estate, held under a distinct title, must have a distinct head allotted to it in the index, and under this head must be entered, in chronological order, as the documents come in to be registered, a reference to every document affecting the estate, being either a simple reference to its place in the repositories of the registry, with the date and the names of the parties, or such a reference combined with a short statement of the general effect of the document. In the latter case each head of the index will somewhat resemble an epitome of an abstract of title. Where the estate becomes subdivided, or united with another estate, a new head is opened in the index, and the old head is closed with a reference to the new one.

If, then, in an inquiry relating to a particular estate, the head appropriated to it in the index is known, a reference to all the information that is required may be obtained with certainty at a glance. The difficulty is to provide a key or index to the index itself. If the inquirer is already provided with a reference to some registered document relating to the estate, the difficulty does not exist, because an indorsement on the document itself will contain a reference to the volume and page of the index where it is entered. For cases where the inquirer has no reference to any registered document, an index of names of owners, and an index of names of estates or places, may be provided; and it was principally by an index of this kind, called "The Index to the Roots of Title," that Mr. Duval proposed to effect his object. The object may be much more efficiently attained by an index referring to a general map on a sufficiently large scale, resembling those used in the Tithe Commutation. Such a map the former Real Property Commissioners, in their report of 1830, did not venture to recommend. But since the publication of that report, the materials for such a map have been accumulating under the proceedings of the Tithe Commissioners, and when the Tithe Commutation is completed, out of 36,500,000 acres, (the whole area of England), about 23,500,000 will have been mapped with sufficient accuracy for the purpose. "Of the 13,000,000 not covered by these maps, a very considerable portion, it is believed, consists of rough and mountain land, which may be mapped at less than half the expense of the inclosed lands. And Captain Dawson believes, from his experience in the progress of tithe commutation, that with respect to one-third of those parishes, of which the surface makes up the 13,000,000 acres, maps of them might be found in existence." Much assistance is to be derived from the triangulation of the Ordnance survey, and from the Ordnance six-inch survey and map of the six northern counties, and sixty-inch survey and maps of the towns.

Such a map would not only (with the aid of some few necessary and wholesome restrictions on sweeping and general charges and dispositions) afford a complete and ready means of reference to the register, but it would also greatly simplify and improve the practice of conveyancing.

We shall shortly return to this subject. In the meantime, we may refer such of our readers as have not access to the Report, to a paper, in which, when Lord Campbell's Registration Bill was last brought forward, (in 1845), we considered, with some minuteness, the mode in which Mr. Duval's plan might be worked out with the help of a map. (See 9 Jur., part 2, p. 207).

RECENT CASES ON THE WINDING-UP ACTS, 1848 AND 1849.

Practice.

THE following points of practice have been decided by the Court in the proceedings under the Winding-up Acts:—

Contributory.

A contributory, who did not attend the settling of the list, nor appeal in time, was permitted to read evidence to explain his non-attendance; and such evidence being satisfactory, he was allowed to go in before the Master to dispute his liability. (Ashburner's case, 13 Jur., part 1, p. 691).

And in another case, where a contributory neglected to attend to the notice by the Master, under the 78th section of the act of 1848, being advised wrongly, that, as he had previously sold his shares, he might disregard it, leave was given to him to go before the Master and dispute his liability, on the terms of paying the costs of the application, and prosecuting his claim to exemption on or before a fixed day. (Holt's case, 3 De G. & S. 99).

Where the question, as to being on the list, is between a purchaser of shares and the official manager, it is not necessary to serve the vendor of those shares with notice of a motion by the purchaser against the Master's decision. (Sanderson's case, Id. 75).

Appeal.

The 33rd section of the act of 1849, providing that no notice of motion for a rehearing of an order, made under the acts of 1848 or 1849, shall be given more than three weeks after the making of such order, is retrospective. (Sanderson's case, 1 Mac. & G. 306).

It should be borne in mind that the orders made under these statutes may be inrolled, so as to prevent a rehearing, like any ordinary decree. (Hollinsworth's case, 1 Hall & T. 587).

Action.

Where an action against a company, by one of its creditors, was restrained, under sect. 73 of the act of 1848, on the making of the winding-up order, until after proof of the debt before the Master, and proof being exhibited under sect. 74, was disallowed by the Master under sect. 75, the Court directed that the creditor should be at liberty, notwithstanding the certificate of the Master, to take or prosecute proceedings at law. (Armstrong's case, 3 De G. & S. 140).

But the creditor should attempt to prove his debt before the Master before he can have this liberty. (Thompson v. The Universal Salvage Company, 6 Dowl. & L. 485).

And an action by a creditor will not be restrained, even after the winding-up order, if the official manager has not been appointed. (Re The India and Australia Mail Steam-packet Company, 13 Jur., part 1, p. 689).

Evidence.

An assignee of a bankrupt shareholder was stated to have made such payments on account of the bankrupt's shares as amounted to an acceptance of them; and it was alleged, that an admission of such payments appeared upon the accounts, signed by him, in the bankruptcy. The Commissioner in bankruptcy would not allow the Registrar, when summoned, to produce the bankruptcy proceedings before the Master. The assignee was thereupon ordered to produce them by a certain time, or, it was intimated, he would probably be committed. (Stone's case, 3 De G. & S. 120).

Where, in an action brought by a creditor of a company against one of the shareholders, the official manager was substituted, under sect. 52 of the act of 1848, for the original defendant, who was stated on the record to have been a "nominal defendant on behalf of the company," this statement made it impossible to use the acts and declarations of the original defendant as evidence at the trial of the cause. (Armstrong v. Normandy, 14 Jur., part 1, p. 579).

Jurisdiction.

The Queen of Spain, by a royal ordinance, granted to a Spanish subject the right to make a railroad in Spain, upon certain conditions. This grant was afterwards assigned by the grantee to the chairman of a London company for making the said railroad. One of the conditions of the grant was, that the company should deposit 10l. per cent. in cash, on the value of the shares, in a bank in Spain, and 3,000,000 reals in the bank of London, within forty days; which last deposit was to devolve to the Spanish State if the former deposit were not made according to the condition. The company's prospectus announced that its affairs would be conducted by a board of directors in London, assisted by a highly influential committee in Madrid, and that the company's office was in London. Shares were taken by Englishmen and also by Spaniards. The Vice-Chancellor held, that from the statements in the prospectus, and "under the circumstances of the case in other particulars," which he did not specify, the company was within English jurisdiction, and he made an order to wind it up, which was subsequently affirmed by the Lord Chancellor. (Turner's case, re The Madrid and Valencia Railway Company, 3 De G. & S. 127).

After an order had been made to wind up a company under the act of 1848, the further proceedings were transferred, on petition, to be served on the same person who was served with the original petition, to the British Court of Bankruptcy, under sect. 123 of the statute. (Renshaw's case, 13 Jur., part 1, p. 274).

Lien.

An order by the Master, under sect. 63 of the act of 1848, for the production of documents by the solicitors of the company to the official manager, was not allowed to destroy or prejudice the lien of the solicitors on the documents in question, but the order was discharged by the Vice-Chancellor, notwithstanding an undertaking was offered by the official manager to pay the solicitors' taxed bill out of the first monies coming to his hands. (Potter's case, 1 De G. & S. 728).

Master.

Sect. 66 of the statute of 1848 does not give the Master authority to order the solicitors of a company to pay to the official manager the balance of monies in their hands which were paid to them by the company on account, and were subsequently found to be of greater amount than the company's debt to them, such balance not being held by them as "contributories, trustees, receivers, bankers, or agents," within the meaning of that section. (Hollingsworth's case, 3 De G. & S. 102).

The object of sect. 28 of the same statute is, that a general direction should be given by the Master, at the outset of proceedings in his office, for the delivery up to the official manager of the "books of account, deeds, instruments, cash, bills, notes, papers, and writings of and belonging to the company," and it does not authorise an ex parte order for such purpose against a particular individual. (Pell's case, Id. 170).

In another reported case, the form of an order upon a contributory for payment of a call is given at length; and it was decided that sect. 46 of the act of 1848 gave the Master power to direct substituted service of such an order where the contributory was dangerously ill, by serving a copy upon her solicitor in the matter, and leaving another copy at her dwelling-house. (Ellis's case, Id. 172).

The Master has power to discharge the petitioner, under the act, from attendance upon him in the matter until further order. (Barber's case, 1 De G. & S. 728).

The Master cannot be called on by the official manager to determine whether a contributory is not liable in one of two characters, but the official manager must seek to make him liable in some one character only. (Pim's case, 1 Mac. & G. 291).

Petition.

A petition for winding-up a company, which was provisionally registered, was allowed to be presented by a holder of scrip, though he had not signed the subscriber's agreement or subscription contract. As it appeared that the petitioner had had no opportunity of inspecting the accounts, an order was made in this case similar to that made in Pocock's case, (1 De G. & S. 731), that the accounts should be produced to him, and he should have liberty to bring any matter arising upon them before the Court; and the petition meanwhile was to stand over, with liberty to mention it again. (Capper's case, 3 De G. & S. 1).

So, two directors of a company, who had personally incurred liabilities on behalf of the company, and had been compelled to pay some of the company's creditors, were allowed to enforce contribution by a petition under the act, although it was sworn that the company was dissolved, and had neither assets nor debts. (Hollingsworth's case, Id. 7).

And again, it was decided that a member of the managing committee of a company, who had been compelled to pay the company's debt to their solicitors, might petition. (Cooke's case, Id. 148).

A petitioner, who had applied to the Court of Bankruptcy, under stat. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 70, for protection, and to carry into effect an arrangement for vesting his effects in trustees for the payment of his debts, such an arrangement having been made and a trustee appointed on his application, was not allowed to proceed in the absence of the trustee, but the petition was ordered to stand over that he might be served with it. (Waters' case, Id. 2).

It has been further decided, that where the petition has not been served upon any one, the appearance of two of the directors of the company by counsel to consent, at the hearing, does not cure the want of service, but the service in such case was ordered to be duly made. (Re The Tring, Reading, and Basingstoke Railway Company, Id. 10).

But service was dispensed with where it appeared that the secretary of the company was present at a meeting at which the petition was agreed to, and also appeared by counsel to consent at the hearing. (Walsey's case, Id. 101).

Service upon the company's solicitor is not sufficient, he not being "an officer or servant of the company" within the meaning of the act of 1848, sect. 10. (Dale's case, Id. 11).

A petition to discharge a winding-up order must be served on the interim manager, where one has been appointed. (Coleman's case, Id. 139).

A company ought not to be charged with the costs of more than one petition to wind it up under the act. (Turner's case, Id. 127).

A petitioner out of the jurisdiction will be ordered to give security for costs. (Latta's case, Id. 186).

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"There is something eminently practical in the general aspect of the book; it is small, compact of print and law, and clearly arranged and set forth."—The Jurist.

"No turf-man, betting-man, horse-dealer, stable-keeper, or in fact any other description of horseman, will be able to get on in his business without this book."—The Veterinarian.

"This is a most useful book, edited by Mr. G. H. H. Oliphant, a Barrister, and embraces every matter in which the Horse is concerned. Every question is treated of with clearness and accuracy, and the law as it exists is explained and demonstrated by recent decisions in the Courts of Law. The question respecting Derby Clubs and their legality forms a prominent portion of the work, and we unfeignedly recommend its possession to all interested in the numerous subjects on which it treats."—Bell's Life.

LONDON, AUGUST 10, 1850.

THERE is no scarcity of men who can work well and slowly, nor of those who can work quickly, but not well. There are a few who can work quickly and well, but not with an even temper; and a very few, and they are of the brighter spirits of the earth, who can work quickly and well, and withal maintain, under the pressure of their work, an even temper, and a courteous and almost playful demeanour, that give a zest to the transaction of the duller business.

Of the latter class of men is the learned judge who has been for some considerable time disposing alone of a great part of the business of nearly three courts of equity; and that, in such a manner, that though the rapidity with which each case has been disposed of has been something unusual even with a judge notoriously quick, yet the dissection of each case has been so complete, and the hearing given to counsel has been so patient, that we believe all have felt that their client's business has been thoroughly investigated, and that justice has been done.

It has been, however, but a fortunate accident, that, at the time when protracted indisposition in one instance, and sudden prostration of health in another, have deprived the suitors of the country of the services of two judges, there should happen to be a judge possessed of health, and energy, and talent, and above all of right goodwill, sufficient to enable him to get through the pressing business of his own court, and of no more besides.

Such a fortunate accident cannot and ought not to be counted upon; and there ought to be some mode of preventing, in case of unforeseen and protracted illness, such a stoppage of the business of the suitors as would have taken place in the Court of Chancery during the latter part of this year, if there had not happened to be a judge willing to work himself to death, but, happily for himself and the country, strong enough in mind and body to get through the heavy task apparently without injury to health.

When a judge of the common law is unable to attend circuit, a serjeant is appointed to take his place, and be temporarily the judge; but when an equity judge is ill, or otherwise unavoidably prevented from sitting in his court, there is no alternative between his resignation and the closing of his court. Why should this be? Of course, to consider the resignation of a judge as a necessary consequence of mere illness, for a moderate or even for an exceedingly protracted period, would be foolish. On such terms first-rate men would not be obtained as judges, for no prudent man would sacrifice the position of a leading advocate in great business for that of a judge, if, as judge, his position were to be as dependent on health, and therefore as uncertain, as it would be if he remained in practice. We say nothing of the harshness and injustice that there would be in the State saying to a public servant, "So long as you are in health we will use you, but the moment you fail in the slightest degree you shall go." But there seems no good reason why, if a judge is ill for any such length of time as to cause public inconvenience, a temporary judge should not be appointed to do his duty pending his convalescence.

If it be said that men of sufficient ability to be substituted judges would not be easily induced to relinquish even for a time their practice, on account of the prospective injury which they might sustain, the answer is, that the argument applies only to men of great business, not necessarily to men of great ability.

NEWSPAPER

It assumes that necessarily there are no men of judicial ability, except those who have great business. No doubt leading counsel of great business would not consent to sit as temporary judges; but there are never wanting men who, though not of great business, are yet of sufficient learning to do sufficiently well the duties of judge, and who might be attracted by the temporary dignity and the temporary emolument. At any rate, even a middling judge is better than no judge, and the experiment is worth trial. An arrangement of this nature, or some other better, if there be any, we trust will hereafter, among other Chancery reforms, be placed at the disposal of Government, so that the suitors of the Court may not, if some of its judges are ill, be compelled to go without justice, unless they can get, what they cannot reckon upon always having, a judge with powers of labour so elastic as those of Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce.

Mr. Forsyth's first legal publication, the Treatise on Composition with Creditors, is well known and esteemed, and has reached a second edition. The law relating to the custody of infants is a subject of less frequent and general interest, but it is one on which, when questions did arise, no one knew where to look for information. The difficulty was the greater, because, as Mr. Forsyth observes, the state of the law on the subject is not very satisfactory. The interference of the Courts depends so much on the exercise of discretionary powers, that it is impossible, upon general principles, to predict with any confidence the view which will be taken of a particular case; and it is therefore important to be acquainted with all the reported cases, in order to see what has been done under circumstances most nearly resembling those of the case in hand. Mr. Forsyth has diligently collected and clearly classified and stated the authorities, which he disposes under the following heads:—1. The rights of parents, and jurisdiction of Courts in questions of custody. 2. Interference of Courts of equity in questions of parental custody. 3. Interference of Courts of common law by writ of habeas corpus. 4. Questions of custody where the infant is illegitimate. 5. Where force or fraud has been used to get possession of infants. 6. Liberty of choice allowed to infants in questions of custody. 7. Law of custody in cases of guardianship. 8. Custody of infants under stat. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 54.

"Hortensius" must be already familiar to many of our readers. For the benefit of those who are still unacquainted with it, we may say that it is a very delightful history of advocacy, or, as Mr. Forsyth expresses it, the office and functions of an advocate, among the principal nations of ancient and modern times, by a scholar and a gentleman, who is also a well-read lawyer, as he shows by occasional brief, unobtrusive, and pertinent references to rules and distinctions of our own law.

In the chapters on the Athenian Courts and on Roman law and advocacy, classical readers will revive with interest and methodise their general recollections of the institutions and times when eloquence achieved its most splendid triumphs. To less learned readers, the author's clear and lively account of the times and manners, and his illustrations from some of the more interesting causes celebres, of which accounts have been preserved, will be at once interesting and instructive. The history of advocacy in France is treated in the same way. There, at least, though the advocates have always behaved with great boldness and independence, they were not left, as with us, entirely to their own guidance in matters of professional morality. Frequent edicts for the regulation of their practice were issued by the French Kings. Thus, in 1274, Philip the Bold "issued a royal ordinance which applied exclusively to advocates. By this they were obliged, under pain of being disbarred, to take an oath upon the holy Gospels that they would, both in their oral pleadings and their opinions upon cases submitted to them, discharge their duty with care, diligence, and fidelity; and would support causes only so long as they believed them to be just, but abandon them when they discovered that they were not. The amount of their fees was to be regulated by the importance of the cause and the ability of the advocate, (just as it is practically with us at present), but it was in no case to exceed thirty livres tournois." (P. 249).

At a later period these various regulations appear to have become methodised into a code of rules for the order.

"Amongst many other prohibitions we find the following:—

- "1. He was not to undertake just and unjust causes alike, without distinction, nor maintain such as he undertook with trickery, fallacies, and misquotations of authorities.
- "2. He was not in his pleadings to indulge in abuse of the opposite party or his counsel.
- "3. He was not to compromise the interests of his clients, by absence from court when the case in which he was retained was called on.
- "4. He was not to violate the respect due to the Court, by either improper expressions or unbecoming gestures.
- "5. He was not to exhibit a sordid avidity of gain, by putting too high a price upon his services.
- "6. He was not to make any bargain with his client for a share in the fruits of the judgment he might recover.
- "7. He was not to lead a dissipated life, or one contrary to the modesty and gravity of his calling.
- "8. He was not, under pain of being disbarred, to refuse his services to the indigent and oppressed.

"Throughout these rules we see that the analogy of knighthood is preserved, and the last breathes the very spirit of chivalry. Purity of life, and disinterested zeal in the cause of the poor and friends, were enjoined upon the cavalier and advocate alike; and doubtless the resemblance between the two professions, of which the latter was thus reminded, had a powerful effect in producing a tone of high-minded feeling, which ought ever to be the characteristic of the Bar. But sometimes this resemblance was carried further than was either safe or agreeable, and the advocate had to perform a warlike office, not in a figurative, but a literal sense. I allude to the appeal or wager of battle, whereby the sword was made the arbiter of disputes, and sanguinary duels were solemnly sanctioned by Courts of law." (P. 253).

It is much to be wished that some of these rules of the old French Bar were adopted in practice by our own. On this subject Mr. Forsyth takes a high ground, without running into impracticable puritanism:—

"But it is worth while to consider whether the accusation which is so commonly brought against lawyers, and especially in their character of advocates, that they violate a moral duty, by being ready to espouse either side of a question in a court of justice, is or is not well founded. If it be true, as Junius has said, that 'the indiscriminate defence of right and wrong contracts the understanding, while it corrupts the heart,' can such a blighting result flow from the profession of the law as it is practised in this country?"

"It would, indeed, be a humiliating reflection to think that the splendid triumphs of the Bar have been achieved by a venal prostitution of the intellect, that the stream of its eloquence is polluted at the source, and that the wonderful ingenuity and skill which mark the higher efforts of forensic oratory are little better than elaborate perversions of fact. 'To make the worse appear the better side' may be an intellectual, but can never be a moral, victory. Success in such a conflict has no innobling feature, and happily mankind are so constituted as to value the heart more than the head, and withhold approbation from those whose powers of argument are better than their principles. It is a remarkable and perhaps a distinguishing feature of the present time, that public reputation and influence must rest on a substratum of moral worth. Private character is of more importance now than at any former period; and when motives are suspected, the degree of influence exercised by an individual is small indeed. If, then, there exists in the minds of many an opinion—and it cannot be disguised that it does exist—that the profession of an advocate is inconsistent with the nice precepts of morality, it will have to undergo a more than ordinary share of odium; and from this odium it may not be unreasonable or impertinent briefly to attempt to vindicate the office."

"It seems probable that such an unfavourable opinion has arisen from confounding two things totally distinct—the duty of the advocate and the office of the judge. It must never be forgotten, that, in the case of pleading at the bar, these duties never coalesce. The individuals are different, and each has a separate province within which he has to act. Other situations and other circumstances are not analogous. In almost every place except a court of justice the speaker takes upon himself to decide upon matters of opinion and fact. If he be a member of a body in which the will of the majority is law, he is a party to the judgment which he has by his arguments supported. Without those arguments, the particular decision would, perhaps, not have been arrived at. He does not appeal to that majority as a body distinct from himself. Whether they agree with him or not, his speech is the open expression of that opinion which has determined him individually to vote in some particular way. If he sincerely believes that his views are correct and ought to be adopted, he is right in endeavouring to influence his hearers; if not, he is a hypocrite."

"But the situation of the advocate is very different. His business is to supply materials out of which a decision is to be formed by others; but not all the materials—only those which relate to one side and view of the question; for he does not stand before the tribunal to array conflicting probabilities and weigh minute differences, as though to him were committed the task of adjudicating between opposing claims. He is to urge, as forcibly as he can, all the arguments which may be suggested in favour of one particular side, and present them to the understanding of those whose duty and vocation it is to weigh everything that may be advanced on both sides, and carefully ascertain the validity of the reasoning by which they are respectively supported. All that an advocate undertakes to perform, in the point of view in which we are now considering him, is this—he says, 'I will bring before the notice of the judge all that can be maintained in favour of one side of the question. The same will be done by my opponent, and the Court will decide between us.' He stands wholly separate and distinct from the tribunal, which pronounces its judgment upon the value it attaches to his arguments, and which recognises their cogency by adopting them, or shews its sense of their insufficiency by rejecting them. The only case in which we can conceive such a situation as this being fairly open to objection on the ground of morality, would be where the attainments and intellectual power of the advocate were so vastly superior to those of the tribunal he was addressing, that he could, as it were, force it to surrender its own judgment to his, and extort from it any sentence which suited that side of the cause on which he happens to be retained."

"But this is obviously a chimerical alarm. Such a phenomenon has never yet appeared in the courts of Westminster, and so long as the roll of judges continues to add to the list of the brightest names amongst the members of the Bar, we may safely predict never will. The motto of the Chevalier Bayard might well serve as the inscription over the gates of our courts of law, and 'Sans peur et sans reproche' proclaim to the world that impartial justice will be there dealt out to all, alike indifferent to the frowns of power, the temptations of corruption, and the subtle artifices of practised ingenuity. It is remarkable, however, that Puffendorf, in his Law of Nature and Nations, makes use of the argument derived from the difference between the functions of the advocate and the judge, to justify conduct revolting to common honesty, and contends for a degree of license in favour of the former which the most unscrupulous would hardly venture to claim. He says, 'For since the judge is supposed fully to understand the law, the advocate, by producing false laws or false authorities, is not likely to prevail to any purpose; and he is never credited upon his bare assertion, but obliged to produce sufficient proof. And therefore, if a guilty person do by this means sometimes escape unpunished, the fault is not to be charged on the advocate, or on the prisoner, but on the judge, who had not the wisdom to distinguish between right and wrong.' (P. 443)."

After shewing the mischief that would arise if counsel assumed a discretionary right of refusing to be engaged in cases of doubtful morality, Mr. Forsyth proceeds:—

"It will be said, however, that this is not fairly meeting the question, and that, by putting the hypothesis of a doubtful case, upon which there may be, previously to a judicial decision, considerable difference of opinion, we are avoiding the difficulty. Suppose the facts are such as to leave no doubt on the mind of the advocate that the cause of his client is morally unjust. Take, for instance, an informality in a will. The intention and wishes of the testator are clearly and unequivocally expressed, but there is a technical objection to the validity of the instrument, and the heir-at-law or nearest of kin seeks to take advantage of the mistake. What is the duty of the advocate then?"

"The answer, I think, is, that he may, with a safe conscience, undertake the cause of the party who seeks to set aside the instrument. If the objection is presented to the Court, the judges are bound by their oaths to give effect to it, supposing it to be valid; and how can it be wrong in an advocate to ask on behalf of another what the law says he has a right to receive?"

'The law allows it, and the Court awards it.'

'In such cases he does no more than point out the requirements of the law, just as he would, if consulted by a client on the question, give an opinion in conformity with that law, without reference to the practical consequences that might flow from it. It seems absurd to contend that he ought to decline to give a legal opinion at all in such a case; and if he is justified in doing that which first gives the client confidence in his claim, why may he not go one step further and support his own opinion by argument in a court of justice? But it does not follow from this, that in all cases where the law is in favour of a party, an advocate is bound to render his services to that party if he applies for them. He may well refuse to become the instrument to work out the ends of a mean and unprincipled malignity. He is not, of all men, to be left without discretion in the employment of the talents with which God has entrusted him. Dabitur licentia sumpta pudenter.

"The information given him may be so clear, and thereby the turpitude of his client so manifest, that he may be compelled to refuse the aid of his ingenuity. All must have read with pleasure of instances where advocates have indignantly thrown up their briefs, when facts of an atrocious nature have been unexpectedly elicited, and they have found that they have been unwittingly engaged in the support or defence of villany.

"Still less may he, under any pretence, or under any circumstances, connive at fraud. Let us put the case of a party who has been paid a debt due to him from another, but who has omitted to give a receipt, and knows that his former debtor has no means of proving the payment. Suppose he were to bring an action against the latter, and these facts were communicated to a counsel with his brief, and he knew that his client was seeking to recover his debt twice over, his duty is clear and imperative. He must decline to appear in such a cause, and leave the dishonest creditor to enforce his claim as he best may." (P. 450).

Again—"But it is not in civil cases, where the rights of parties depend so much upon technical and conventional rules, but in criminal cases, that the chief odium is incurred by the Profession; and if the license, which we sometimes see boldly challenged on its behalf, to sacrifice every consideration to the one object of enabling a client to escape conviction, were necessary for its exercise, it is not easy to see how that odium could be repelled. Such a license all right-thinking men must repudiate, and it tends only to the dishonour of a noble calling to represent it as requiring and justifying the use of trickery and falsehood. The principle is as clear as noon-day, that no man ought to do for another what that other cannot, without moral turpitude, do for himself. The advocate stands before the tribunal to plead the cause and represent the person of his client, utimur enim fictione personarum, et velut ore alieno loquimur, but he cannot possibly, by virtue of his agency, acquire rights greater than are possessed by his principal. He may not assert that which he knows to be a lie; he may not connive at, much less attempt to substantiate, a fraud; he may not avail himself of the wretched sophistry of Paley, and say, 'that there are falsehoods which are not lies—that is, which are not criminal, as where no one is deceived, which is the case in . . . a prisoner pleading not guilty—an advocate asserting the justice, or his belief of the justice, of his client's cause. In such instances no confidence is destroyed, because none was reposed; no promise to speak the truth is violated, because none was given, or understood to be given.' Every man is under an obligation to speak the truth if he speaks at all, and virtually promises to do so every time that he opens his lips. 'For there is in mankind,' says Jeremy Taylor, 'an universal contract implied in all their intercourses, and words being instituted to declare the mind, and for no other end, he that hears me speak hath a right, in justice to be done him, that, as far as I can, what I speak be true, for else he by words does not know your mind, and then as good and better not speak at all.' If an advocate does not expect to be believed when he asserts his conviction of the innocence of his client, why does he volunteer the assertion at all? His only object must be to persuade the jury, by throwing into the balance the weight of his own asseveration, in order to make it incline in favour of a verdict of acquittal.

"It is painful to allude to two cases of recent occurrence, where attempts were made to secure the escape of criminals from conviction by directing suspicions against the innocent; and in each instance the prisoner had privately confessed his guilt, and the counsel was acquainted with this fact. The subject may be dismissed with the single observation, that the opinion of the Bar was in entire accordance with that of the public in condemning the line of defence adopted." (P. 459).

Nassau W. Senior, Esq., Master in Chancery.
C. F. Cooper, Esq., Q. C., LL.D., F. R. S.
George Capron, Esq.

Parties assuring within Six Months of their last Birthday are allowed a diminution of Half a Year in the Premium charged.

Policies do not become void by the Life assured going beyond the prescribed limits—so far as regards the interest of Third Parties—provided they pay the additional Premium so soon as the fact comes to their knowledge.

"Free Policies" are issued at a small increased rate of Premium, which remain in force although the Life assured may go to any part of the world.

Parties may effect Assurances by the payment of a Single Premium, with the privilege of withdrawing the sum paid.

The Tables are especially favourable to young and middle-aged Lives, and the limits allowed to the Assured, without extra charge, are unusually extensive.

Eighty per Cent. of the Profits are divided every fifth year among the Assured.

At the first division of Profits up to December 31, 1849, the average addition to Policies was fully 50l. per Cent. on the Amount paid in Premiums.

LONDON, AUGUST 17, 1850.

MR. TURNER'S bill for diminishing the delay and expense of proceedings in the Court of Chancery has been passed into law without any material alteration; and as it may have the effect of introducing some very important changes in the practice of the Court of Chancery, we shall proceed to consider some of its provisions.

The most important enactments are those relating to special cases; and of those the most important feature is, perhaps, the power given to the Court of Chancery to declare its opinion on the construction of written instruments, without proceeding to administer relief consequent on such declaration. The clause to which we refer is the 14th, by which it is enacted, "that it shall be lawful for the said Court, upon the hearing of any such special case as aforesaid, to determine the questions raised therein, or any of them, and by decree to declare its opinion thereon, and, so far as the case shall admit of the same, upon the right involved therein, without proceeding to administer any relief consequent upon such declaration; and that every such declaration of the said Court contained in any such decree shall have the same force and effect as such declaration would have had, and shall be binding to the same extent as such declaration would have been, if contained in a decree made in a suit between the same parties instituted by bill: provided always, that it shall be lawful for the said Court, if it shall see fit so to do, before proceeding to make such decree as aforesaid, to send any case or cases for the opinion of any of Her Majesty's Courts of common law, reserving the consideration of all further directions and of the costs, and to make such decree as aforesaid upon such further directions; provided also, that if, upon the hearing of such special case as aforesaid, the Court shall be of opinion that the questions raised thereby, or any of them, cannot properly be decided upon such case, the said Court may refuse to decide the same."

VOL. XIV.

The importance of this enactment will be more appreciated if we recollect the rule laid down, or rather treated as settled beyond question, in Say v. Creed, (3 Hare, 455), viz. that the Court will not, in a suit for the execution of the trusts of a will, decide on any question of construction, without first taking the accounts, except on the following conditions, viz. that all of every class entitled to take, shall be parties to the suit; all competent to bind themselves; and all waiving the taking the accounts; and that the personal representative shall admit assets for all purposes—conditions of which it may be fairly said that not one case brought before the Court in a year comes up to them. (See also Mitford v. Reynolds, Ph. 185).

Again, it is a well-known rule of the Court, that it will not decide on the construction of instruments as between parties or classes, some of whose interests, if existing at all, are contingent on the parties being in existence on the happening of some future event; as, for instance, in the case where a fund is given to a tenant for life, and after his decease it purports to be disposed of in favour of a given class, if then living, but in such words that it is doubtful whether the gift to the class does not fail. There the Court will not decide the question between the contingent remaindermen and the next of kin till the death of the tenant for life, because, possibly, then the class may not exist, and there will be no question to decide. Now, this rule of practice is often very inconvenient, all parties concerned being desirous to have the construction of the will determined during the life of the tenant for life. To this class of cases, as well as to cases where, before, the Court would not determine until the accounts were taken, we suppose that the new act will be applicable.

With regard to the cases where, by the practice of the Court, there must be a preliminary inquiry to ascertain whether there is a fund, the inconvenience of the rule is still greater, as it becomes frequently necessary to go through considerable expense and delay to ascertain what no one connected with the estate doubts, only because some of the parties are incompetent, by reason of infancy or other disability, to bind themselves. In all these cases the new act seems to provide for the due representation of all such interests of persons under disability, so as to enable the Court to determine rights without decreeing relief, leaving it to the trustees or other holders of the fund, to act upon their own knowledge of the facts. Of course, the effect of the 15th section, giving protection to trustees and executors doing any act pursuant to the declaration of rights made by the Court, will only be to protect them as regards the declaration of rights, not as against any incorrectness in the statement of any facts contained in the case, or any incorrectness in regard to any other facts, so far as such incorrectness may affect any persons not parties to the case.

THE REGISTRATION AND CONVEYANCING COMMISSION.

THE commissioners have published, in addition to the Report, and a short supplementary paper by the two dissentient commissioners, the following papers and evidence :—

1. A communication from Mr. Downie, of the General Register-house, Edinburgh, as to the proposed registry of deeds in England, containing some useful practical suggestions with reference to Mr. Duval's plan.

2. A letter from the late Mr. Bell to Mr. Duval, as to excluding the effect of notice except in cases of actual fraud.

3. A paper by Mr. Sanders, (the secretary to the commission), as to registration in Belgium, with maps and forms.

4. A paper by Mr. George B. Robertson, (of the Edinburgh Register-house), explaining the Scotch system, with the report of a committee of the Society of Writers to the Signet as to some proposals for amendment.

5. A paper by Mr. J. M. Ludlow on registration in various foreign countries.

6. An historical account of registration in England, by Mr. Sanders.

7. A complete collection of the forms for carrying Mr. Wilson's plan into effect, with a letter from that gentleman explaining merely the general principle of his plan. (These forms, which exhibit the working of the plan in the minutest details, are subsequently explained at length in Mr. Wilson's evidence).

8. A letter from Mr. Fane as to notice of acts of bankruptcy.

9. Projet de loi sur le renouvellement et la conservation du Cadastre, (France).

The minutes of evidence contain the examinations of Messrs. Peirce Mahony, James Stewart, Robert Wilson, J. H. Christie, James Bacon, C. T. Swanston, Charles Trevor, (Comptroller of Legacy-duties), and Captains Dawson (of the Tithe Survey) and Yolland (of the Ordnance Survey).

Mr. Mahony, who is a solicitor in extensive practice in Ireland, speaks to the enormous labour and expense occasioned by the present system of registration in Ireland :—

"First we make what is called a common search; that is, the solicitor of the vendor makes a search; all acts which he finds on record are set down in chronological order. He then transmits that search, with copies of the deeds he possesses, to the solicitor for the vendee. They then frame what is called the requisition for a negative search, by which they call on the registrar to give a list of all acts relating to the lands or the parties they name, except so and so, giving for exception every one of the acts of which they are cognisant. This being done by the parties engaged in the sale, it becomes then the duty of the registrar to have his records examined de novo; so that a double search, in fact, takes place; and if a negative search, for which the registrar becomes personally responsible, is required, he (as I am told) invariably employs three separate persons to make it, each independently of the other; and when they have finished their labours, the three searches so made for him are compared one with the other before the negative search is written out for his signature. It is apparent that, by this system, four checks against error are established for the safety of the registrar and the purchaser." (P. 445).

"As another example of the expense of searches, I may state that Mr. Bockett, as solicitor for the Law Life Assurance Company, who are about to advance 600,000*l.* on the Earl's estates, tells me that, even with the aid of that very search which I have just mentioned, he and Mr. Kinderley, as solicitor for the present Earl, estimate the expense of continuing it from 1832 at from 1500*l.* to 2000*l.* He also tells me, that to avoid a negative search, without the exceptions I have just described, it was deemed economical to allow the solicitor making out the title to the late Mr. Thomas Martin's estates in the county of Galway, 1200*l.* for a common search." (P. 445).

The search, when made, appears to be trustworthy as far as it goes. But on account of the enormous expense of a complete search, either the common search is relied on, or counsel is required to draw instructions for a negative search, i. e. to use his discretion as to what searches may be omitted without much risk. Thus Mr. Christie says, (p. 512), "From a set of instructions for searches, in which I cannot say any were improper, I cut out two-thirds, risking it rather than incur the enormous expense; and when the instructions were so pruned, I was told that the searches would still cost about 700*l.* I was told, at the same time, that in the year 1837 a search had been made which cost 1300*l.*, which, upon what grounds I could not understand, was a search that was wholly useless for the new purpose. . . . In point of time, these searches, I mean searches of any extent, always occupy months. . . . I have never seen searches which, when you came to look at the instructions with reference to the abstract, were complete. It is done in a perfunctory way. . . . I would much rather peruse the abstract, than, having perused the abstract, begin and draw instructions for searches; the task is quite frightful."

The searches, thus imperfectly and expensively made, lead to memorials only, not to the deeds themselves; and memorials for registry, it is well known, are considered to be best drawn when they give least information. Whether the deeds, &c., to which the memorials relate, can be procured, is a mere chance; often neither the originals nor copies or abstracts of a large number of them can be found. The registry gives notice to the intending purchaser that there is a deed, which he may find or not, at his own peril. Thus the Irish registry, having answered the purposes of oppression and confirmation for which it was established, has now become a grievous burthen upon the descendants of the conquerors who devised it.

We shall take another opportunity of adverting to Mr. Wilson's evidence. That of Captains Dawson and Yolland is conclusive in favour of a public map, and gives some useful information on matters of detail. The course of examination pursued by some of the commissioners with reference to the map question strikes us as being remarkably puerile.

Mr. Christie's examination will repay a careful perusal. It exhibits the rare and refreshing spectacle of a powerful and cultivated mind instructed and sobered, but not contracted, by a long and arduous professional practice. Much of Mr. Christie's evidence relates to the subject of shortening conveyances. He of course condemns the absurd scheme of incorporating clauses into a deed by reference to an act of Parliament.

"Have you formed any opinion whether anything could be done in the way of shortening conveyances by annexing incidents to particular subjects?"—I can very well fancy that something could be done in that way; I think something might be done. You might say, that whenever a trust for sale was created, it should empower the trustee to exercise this and that discretion. But then I would do it in the mode of annexing that to his office, not in the form we were referring to of saying it should have the effect of such and such words; I would let the Legislature say, in its own words, what it means to enact on the subject.

"In the case of a mortgage, for instance, you would say such and such consequences should follow from the mortgage transaction?"—Certainly something might be done; and I think that is the true mode in which conveyances could be shortened, and not by saying that such a thing shall be the effect of such and such words.

"Do you not think you might get rid, in many cases, of all that long part of a deed, the powers of distress and entry; they are of very little use?"—I fancy the powers of distress might very well be omitted in limitations of rent-charges. I never exactly understood why they were introduced." (P. 522).

For some felicitous observations on the use of recitals we must refer to the Blue-book itself.

"Many titles are held under recitals of deeds, the originals of which are lost?"—Yes. And I must mention, that I think the length of our legal instruments proceeds in some degree from this cause. You know every deed is a law between the parties; every contract is a law. Now, there is a great disinclination, and it has not been the system of legislation or private dealing in this country, to leave anything to the discretion of judges; it has not been the habit to leave details to be deduced from general provisions, but to specify and bargain—in other words, to legislate—as to all the details. It is just the old story between minute and particular legislation and codification; and it is expressed in an observation of Dr. Johnson, in a little Life that he wrote of Frederick the Great, in this way:—"The Code Frederique is comprised in a volume of moderate bulk, and therefore can only contain general rules, to be applied to particular cases, at the discretion of judges. To embarrass justice by a multiplicity of provisions, or to endanger justice by reposing confidence in judges, are the opposing rocks between which legislative skill has never yet found an open passage." It struck me as a remarkable observation, proceeding from a man who could have hardly conversed with a lawyer, and who was writing a little life for a magazine. I think the same thing applies to our deeds; in fact, we do not give the law fair play—we provide for too much.

"Formerly, when there was not so much conveyancing, it was generally done by very skilful hands; at now, from the immense quantity of conveyancing, great deal of it is done by persons not so skilful. Do not you think that many of the tautologous expressions used have perhaps grown up from the apprehension of parties, and from their not having confidence to rely on a single expression. They have been the result of the doubt and difficulty of parties preparing deeds?"—No question; but I think we got more tautologous and more prolix after some of the common lawyers, who had been judges, came to practise conveyancing in troublesome times. I think they imported some of the Nisi Prius eloquence into our forms; and they found them very much corrupted, I think, by the forms of the Crown grants. In this state the conveyancing system was found by Mr. Booth. It is impossible not to feel there are great force and skill in his deeds, but still they have an extraordinary multiplicity of words. Mr. Butler pruned them down a little, but still he left too many words; and I think we have been mending ever since. We do not now talk about 'all that plot, piece, or parcel of land;' we are satisfied to call it 'a piece of land.' We do not talk now of the 'reversion and reversions, remainder and remainders,' and such like; at least, we do not all do it; and we are mending.

"A great deal of the length of those provisions arises from the apprehension of difficulties under some unforeseen decision of a Court of equity?"—And from this also, that parties like much better to specify in their own contract those things which they really mean to contract for, than to leave them to be collected from the whole of the equity reports, although they may be all found there. It is a handier way to get, in your own contract,—'This is what we mean.'

"Your practice, of course, leads you very often to consider conditions of sale. Do you not think that they exhibit an unsatisfactory state of the law between vendor and purchaser?"—Singularly so. I think they shew how bad the state of our titles is. There is something or other essentially wrong.

"Has it not been frequently within your experience to find that persons are induced to buy, under these conditions of sale, what may be considered bad titles?"—Certainly; they bind themselves by the conditions to take what may be a bad title.

"And, from their frequent occurrence, persons who have not good advice are, by means of them, constantly entrapped into contracts?"—Yes." (P. 524).

We could wish that the following statement were strictly accurate:—

"And in these days you do not consider it the practice of respectable conveyancers to spread a deed into as many words as they can employ?"—Certainly not.

"And not a usual thing to have two forms, supposed to be equally efficient; the long one to be applied in cases in which the charge may be conveniently made, and the short one to be applied in cases where a large charge would probably be complained of?"—It does not exist. A proposal to a conveyancer's counsel to do any piece of business in a mode more expensive to the party, with a view to increase his own fees, would, I conceive, be taken in the same way as a proposal to Dr. — to prolong an illness with a like view. The tone in these matters is necessarily given by persons who are most fully employed; and, putting better motives out of sight, their interest is to find the most compendious modes of disposing of business. One object with conveyancers is to please their clients. Now, I never had a case in my life in which my client would not be better pleased to have a short deed than a long one. It is not the vice of solicitors. I am satisfied they must find it so distasteful to their clients to see the long deed, that they would themselves rather waive any profit they could have by it. They do not like long deeds. Nobody wishes for long deeds; but the kind of transactions that we have do not admit of being done by short instruments. The frame of language that we use is the shortest frame of language that can be used. It is very true there are no elliptical forms of expression, but there are no figurative forms of expression, and nothing to give character, force, or intensity to the idea. You always mean to express with exactness and precision one thing; but if you are to express it with perfect exactness, it often takes that which would seem a long and elaborate mode of expression, although it really is not so." (P. 521).

That conveyancers do not make some drafts more concise than others, in consideration of the smallness of the transaction or the means of the client, we must take leave to deny. The contrary is notorious. Mr. Jarman's printed collection of precedents, containing long and short forms for the same thing, has caused no scandal. Mr. Hayes has published, and recommended for use, some very concise forms, which he has occasionally used himself, but has never habitually used; and we doubt if there is a conveyancer in practice who has not on many occasions, for the purpose of shortening a long draft, struck out words from his common forms which, in other cases, he allows to stand. "It does not exist?" Why, we have now before us a pupil's copy of the folio volume of common forms now or very lately in daily use in the chambers of one of the very commissioners whom Mr. Christie was addressing, and the forms are in pairs, the short form following the long, as regularly as answer follows question in Mr. Christie's examination. They have come down, with very little alteration, from the chambers of Sir E. Sugden, through an eminent pupil of that eminent and orthodox conveyancer, and are now probably used in a dozen different chambers. A conveyancer in extensive practice of the "best" kind may in time forget the use of short forms, because his business never requires them; but in chambers where the practice is less select short forms are in frequent use.

Mr. Christie's assertion, that "the frame of language that we use is the shortest frame of language that can be used," is ambiguous. If he means that the principle on which conveyancing language is or professes to be framed is correct, we agree. The scheme is to express everything that is intended, and is not necessarily implied. Nothing is to be left to supposition. But conveyancers at this day use many more words than are required or justified by the principle. Take, for example, the following extract from covenants for title settled by one of the eminent conveyancers who were present when Mr. Christie delivered himself of his remarkable assertion:—

"And this indenture further witnesseth, that the said [A. B.], for himself, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, doth covenant, promise, and agree with and to the said [C. D.], his appointees, heirs, and assigns, in manner following; (that is to say), That for and notwithstanding any act, deed, matter, or thing whatsoever by the said [A. B.] or the said [E. F.], the said testator, deceased, made, done, committed, or executed, or knowingly permitted or suffered to the contrary, he, the said [A. B.], at the time of the sealing and delivery of these presents, is lawfully, rightfully, and absolutely seized of and in, or well and sufficiently entitled to, the said manors, messuages, tenements, lands, and hereditaments hereinbefore granted, released, or assured, or expressed and intended so to be, and every part thereof, with their appurtenances, for a good, sure, sole, perfect, absolute, and indefeasible estate of inheritance in fee-simple, without any manner of condition, use, trust, power of revocation, equity of redemption, remainder, or limitation of any use or uses, or other restraint, incumbrance, cause, matter, or thing whatsoever, to alter, change, charge, defeat, incumber, revoke, or make void the same."

The same able conveyancer on another occasion used the same form, with all the words in italics struck out, and with perfect and well-founded confidence, that the form so shortened was equally effectual in substance, and, we will add, more correct in expression.

We do not say that conveyancers insert words into their drafts for the mere purpose of lengthening them, or that they are ever asked, in plain terms, to make a draft long. Things are not managed so grossly. The augurs meet without laughing to each other, and seldom laugh even in their own sleeves, and they are neither more nor less conscientious than other educated men. They take the forms and the system as they find them, and do not make any effort at amendment which they feel would be detrimental to their own interests. Conveyancing counsel and solicitors are not overpaid for the severe labour and great responsibility which are cast on them; and the remuneration of the former is much less dependent on the length of their drafts than it used to be; but every one knows that solicitors' charges are still, to a great extent, estimated by folios.

The following remarks on the essential connexion between a system of documentary title and registration are excellent:—

"In a system of documentary title, I fancy that registration will enter into the idea of it as an essential part of such a system. It would have been conceived hardly possible that a system of documentary title could have existed without registration; but from the experience that we have had, we know now that, in point of fact, a system may go on, and practically may work much better than anybody could have anticipated, without registration. But still, if it be a perfection in the system to know certainly all the documents which, in fact, may affect the right to the land, I take it there is no mode of satisfying purchasers or mortgagees, or others who are dealing with the property, that they do see all, but a system of registration. The only question is, how to make the system perfect, so that we may be clear that no document escapes attention. Then, following out that principle, I suppose that registration is just as essential with respect to all property held by documentary title, as it is with respect to land. I take it that the registration is as necessary for interests in chattel property, provided it becomes the subject of documentary title, as it is with respect to land. But that is, perhaps, going beyond the subject of your inquiry; only I mean, that if the principle of registration be admitted, and a plan or system of registration once agreed on, you will not be able consistently to stop on the registration of title to land—you must register the title to equitable interests in stock, register copyrights, and such like.

"Patents and assignments of patents?—Just so; the same principle of registration will apply to all things, and I fancy that a system of documentary title is essentially imperfect and incomplete without registration.

"Registration would be particularly necessary, with reference to reversionary interests in personality, which are the subject of sale and disposition to a very large extent?—Certainly, and with respect to which there is no complete means of knowing whether they are dealt with or not. Of course, notice to trustees is something, but that is imperfect, as the notice may probably have been given to a trustee who is gone, and you may have to deal with the executor or administrator of the surviving trustee.

"And occasionally you can obtain no information at all as to previous dealings or incumbrances?—Exactly.

"And for that reason a man's title becomes unmarketable?—Yes; the law has provided no certain or uniform mode for trustees to receive, preserve, transmit, or communicate information of incumbrances." (P. 510).

There are many suggestions in Mr. Christie's evidence relating to matters not within the scope of the present commission. The commissioners themselves, at the conclusion of their Report, point out the necessity of a general revision of the law of property, so as to simplify, as far as may be consistent with the benefits of ownership, the interests which may be created in land, to define their limits with precision, and to remove the obscurities and anomalies of the rules which concern them. Such a revision should not be confined to real property.

CONTENTS OF THE WORK.

Buying, Selling, Exchanging; Unsoundness, Vice, Warranty, False Representation; Auctions and Repositories; the Privileges and Liabilities of Innkeepers, Livery-stable Keepers, Farriers, Trainers, &c.; Hiring and Borrowing Horses, Negligent Driving; the Rule of the Road, and Trespass in Hunting. The present State of the Law of Racing, Wagers, and Gaming. Also a few unreported cases; the Statutes to the present Time; with some Miscellaneous Information.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"There is something eminently practical in the general aspect of the book; it is small, compact of print and law, and clearly arranged and set forth."—The Jurist.

"No turf-man, betting-man, horse-dealer, stable-keeper, or in fact any other description of horseman, will be able to get on in his business without this book."—The Veterinarian.

"This is a most useful book, edited by Mr. G. H. H. Oliphant, a Barrister, and embraces every matter in which the Horse is concerned. Every question is treated of with clearness and accuracy, and the law as it exists is explained and demonstrated by recent decisions in the Courts of Law. The question respecting Derby Clubs and their legality forms a prominent portion of the work, and we unfeignedly recommend its possession to all interested in the numerous subjects on which it treats."—Bell's Life.

CLERICAL, MEDICAL, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.—Established 1834.

NOTICE is hereby given that the USUAL DIVIDEND OF FIVE PER CENT. (less Income-tax) on the paid-up capital on the Shares of the Society will be payable at this Office on and after Tuesday, the 20th day of August inst.

An Act of Parliament, just obtained, enables this Society to give important Benefits to Persons now Assuring, the particulars of which are set forth in a Report, which can be obtained of any of the Society's agents, or by applying to

GEO. H. PINCKARD, Resident Secretary.

DIRECTORS.

Church, John Thomas, Esq.
 Donne, Samuel Edward, Esq.
 Fonblanque, John S. M., Esq.
 Jones, William, Esq.
 Maynard, Jonas Alleyne, Esq.
 Morris, John Michael, Esq.
 Mourilyan, Joseph Noakes, Esq.
 Murray, William, Esq.
 Symons, Jelinger Cookson, Esq.
 Torr, John Smala, Esq.
 Withall, William, Esq.
 Wordsworth, Charles, Esq.

This Society presents the following advantages to the Assured:—

First.—The security of a large subscribed Capital.
 Second.—Exemption of the Assured from all liability.
 Third.—Tables of Premiums calculated on the true law of mortality, expressly for this Office, and affording particular advantages to young lives.

Fourth.—Participating and Non-participating Scales of Premiums. In the former the Assured are entitled to EIGHTY PER CENT. or FORTY-FIFTHS of the profits periodically, (without deduction for interest on capital or guarantee fund), either by way of addition to the sum assured, or in diminution of Premium, at the option of the Assured.

Fifth.—Policies INDISPUTABLE, except in case of fraud.
 Sixth.—This Society gives a much larger share of profits to the Assured, and at a lower rate of Premium, than the great majority of other Life Offices.

Seventh.—Parties wishing to assure their lives without participating in the profits can do so on a lower scale of Premiums than that of a large proportion of other Offices.

Assurances may be effected through any respectable Solicitor, or by application to

CHARLES JOHN GILL, Secretary.

. Diseased Lives assured at adequate Premiums.

TRUSTEES.

The Right Hon. Lord Montagu.
 The Right Hon. the Lord Chief Baron.
 The Hon. Mr. Justice Coleridge.
 The Hon. Mr. Baron Rolfe.
 The Hon. Mr. Justice Erie.
 Nassau W. Senior, Esq., Master in Chancery.
 C. P. Cooper, Esq., Q. C., LL.D.
 F. R. S.
 George Capron, Esq.

Policies do not become void by the Life assured going beyond the prescribed limits—so far as regards the interest of Third Parties—provided they pay the additional Premium so soon as the fact comes to their knowledge.

"Free Policies" are issued at a small increased rate of Premium, which remain in force although the Life assured may go to any part of the world.

The Tables are especially favourable to young and middle-aged Lives, and the limits allowed to the Assured, without extra charge, are unusually extensive.

Eighty per Cent. of the Profits are divided at the end of every fifth year among the Assured.

At the first division to the end of 1849, the addition to the Amount Assured averaged above 50l. per Cent. on the Premiums paid.

The subjoined is a specimen Table of Bonuses added to Policies of 1000l. each, which had then been in force for Periods varying between four and five years:—

Age at Commencement.	Amount added to Policy.	Cash Payment.

LONDON, AUGUST 24, 1850.

In a recent number of THE JURIST, p. 282, some passages were referred to in the review of Mr. Forsyth's Hortensius, extracted from the code of rules of the old French Bar. It may be not uninteresting to observe, that to the observance of very similar rules, the laws of Geneva require advocates to pledge themselves by oath. The oath is as follows:—

"I swear before God,

To be faithful to the republic and the canton of Geneva;

Never to depart from the respect due to the tribunals and authorities;

Never to counsel or maintain a cause which does not appear to be just or equitable, unless it be the defence of an accused person;

Never to employ knowingly, for the purpose of maintaining the causes confided to me, any means contrary to truth, and never to seek to mislead the judges by any artifice or false statement of fact or law;

To abstain from all offensive personality, and to advance no fact contrary to the honour or reputation of the parties, if it be not indispensable to the cause with which I may be charged;

Not to encourage either the commencement or the continuance of a suit from any motive of passion or interest;

Not to reject, for any considerations personal to myself, the cause of the weak, the stranger, or the oppressed."

And these rules are, in substance, incorporated in the Code of Civil Procedure reported to the Legislature of New York in December, 1849, by the Commissioners on Vol. XIV. G G

Practice and Pleadings*. By this code it is proposed to be enacted, (tit. 5, art. 3), that "it is the duty of an attorney and counsellor—

1. To support the constitution and laws of the United States, and of this State.

2. To maintain the respect due to the courts of justice and judicial officers.

3. To counsel or maintain such actions, proceedings, or defences only as appear to him legal and just, except the defence of a person charged with a public offence.

4. To employ, for the purpose of maintaining the causes confided to him, such means only as are consistent with truth, and never to seek to mislead the judges by any artifice or false statement of fact or law.

5. To maintain inviolate the confidence, and at every peril to himself to preserve the secrets, of his clients.

6. To abstain from all offensive personality, and to advance no fact prejudicial to the honour or reputation of a party or witness, unless required by the justice of the cause with which he is charged.

7. Not to encourage either the commencement or the continuance of an action or proceeding from any motive of passion or interest; and,

8. Never to reject, for any consideration personal to himself, the cause of the defenceless or the oppressed."

Substantially this is the code of the English Bar. There is, however, one passage in it which is not quite intelligible, viz. that which lays down that it is the duty of a counsellor never to seek to mislead the judge by any false statement of law. If it be meant by this, that the advocate is not to contend for a view of the law which he does not personally entertain, that is certainly not the code of the English Bar, nor do we anderstand it to have been ever the code of any civilised Bar. For the duty of counsel is not to declare the law, but to shew all the reasons that occur to him, where there is any doubt, to prove the law to be as his client has viewed it. It is for the judge to say, on hearing both sides, what the law is—a point on which the advocate may have an opinion, but on which no one can be said to have knowledge until it has been decided by the judge. If it be meant that a counsellor ought not to state as law that which is clearly not so; as if it be meant that a counsellor ought not to assert that a conveyance to A., without words of inheritance, vests in him a fee, or some such palpable untruism as that, all must agree to such a proposition; but it would be scarcely worth while to record, in a code of rules for counsellors, that they must not make absolute fools of themselves by talking nonsense; or to assume that any government will appoint judges so very ignorant of law, as to be open to be misled by a gross and palpable misstatement of the law. If it be meant that a counsellor ought not to misquote a decision or the like, that, we apprehend, would be not making a false statement of law, but of fact, and of course it would be wrong; but if it be meant that he ought not to argue to shew that the legal result of a decision is not what it is generally taken to be, or what he personally understands it to be, but the reverse, or something different, to that we cannot accede; for that would assume that the common understanding must be right, and would carry much further than would be wise or beneficial the argument à communi opinionis jurisprudentum. In any view of the passage to which we refer, it seems to us to state either a perfectly useless rule, or an improper one; and if we were called upon to lay down a code of rules for the Bar of any highly civilised community, we should strike it out.

SINCE we commenced our notice of this Report, the plan of the commissioners has been adopted by the Legislature, in the shape of "An Act to amend the Laws for the Registration of Assurances of Lands in Ireland." The basis of the registry in that country is to be the Ordnance maps, which are already in general use there for conveyancing purposes. These maps are on the scale of six inches to a mile, except the towns, which have sixty inches to a mile. According to Captain Yolland's evidence, boundaries can be traced on the six-inch maps with such accuracy that the probable error will not exceed four feet six inches; and on the sixty-inch maps the error would be under six inches. The time for the commencement of the registry is to be fixed by the Commissioners of the Treasury, who have power to order new maps to be made if necessary. We may, therefore, hope soon to see the commencement of this important experiment. In the meantime the details of the plan may be advantageously studied in the act, which is very short, and, having been little mangled in committee, is a fair specimen of the excellent draughtsmanship that distinguishes many of the recent Government measures.

The commissioners mention the following objections to Mr. Duval's plan:—1. The necessity, for a long time to come, of searching an index of names, namely, the index to the roots of title. 2. The possibility of mistake as to the title under which particular parcels are held, occasioned by the difficulty of identifying parcels, or by misconstruction of deeds or wills, and leading to registration under the wrong title, (a very obvious and serious danger). 3. The possible loss of all documentary evidence, and with it of the symbol or mark appropriated to the title in the registry. 4. The complication consequent upon successive alienations of parts of an estate originally registered under one title—a difficulty not wholly removable by requiring a specification of the parcels aliened to be entered under the original symbol. 5. The probable conflict of registered titles, as where the owner of a long term and the owner of the reversion register their titles independently under different symbols, the former, either from actual mistake, or with a view to make a title, dealing with the land as if he were seised in fee. In such a case, a purchaser, having a reference to one of the registered titles only, might find nothing to lead him to a discovery of the other. So a title to mines might be registered under one symbol, and a title to the surface of the land, without any reference to the mines, under another; and if the mines were not worked, lapse of time would not bar the right to them. So the titles to a rent-charge, and to the land charged, might be the subject of independent registries; and, in the common case of part of an estate charged with a rent being sold under an agreement by the vendor to pay the rent and indemnify the purchaser, time would not run against the rent-owner in favour of the purchaser, so long as the rent was paid by the vendor or his representatives.

Mr. Duval proposed to obviate the first three objections by "a directory to the symbols of registered titles, consisting of alphabetical lists of parties to deeds, with some particulars as to the property embraced in the respective classes;" and to provide for the loss of the symbol, by allowing a vendor to register an inhibition, for a term to be limited, on acts by himself or persons representing him. But these would be only palliatives.

A map index is not open to any of these objections, and it is suggested in the Report, that it may be made use of in improving the law with respect to certain rights affecting lands, which, being not necessarily evidenced by any actual use or enjoyment, may remain latent and unbarred for indefinite periods—as in the case already alluded to of rights to minerals, and rent-charges overriding lands belonging to different owners, and wholly paid by one of those owners:—

"The difficulties connected with such incorporeal hereditaments appear to have been present to the minds of those who framed the ancient rules of law which facilitated the extinction and embarrassed the transfer of property of this description. The purchase by the owner of a rent-charge of any part of the land subject to it, or the release of any part of the land from it, was, and indeed still is, an extinguishment of the whole rent. On the transfer also of such a rent, the assent or attornment of the terre-tenants or freeholders in possession of the land was formerly requisite—a rule which extended to the transfer also of reversions and remainders, and of every property which cast on the tenant of the land an obligation to perform a duty to a new proprietor.

"One ground of the first of these rules is stated to be, because the rent is 'against common right,' which we may, without straining, interpret to be against, or dehors those rules of law which are necessary to the convenient enjoyment of land, or to the connexion of lord and tenant.

"The ground of the other of these rules (requiring attornment) obviously was to provide a substitute (applicable to the peculiar nature of the property) for the livery of seisin, which secured notoriety to the transfer of freehold land in possession. Thus the law, in its theory at least, became consistent as to the transfer of all species of property. The transfer of the immediate freehold was made notorious by the delivery; the creation of a term of years by the entry of the tenant; the transfer of the reversion or remainder, and of rents and the like, by the attornment of the owners of the particular estates, or of the terre-tenants; while easements only, with some rights which created no obligation on the tenant of the land, were allowed to rest on the notoriety of use and enjoyment commonly incident to their existence. The case of the reservation of unopened mines appears to have escaped attention, from the comparative insignificance in early times of this now important kind of property.

"The expedients by which sufficient notoriety was sought to be secured were so rude, that their abolition is not to be wondered at or lamented; but they were objectionable only because they were not completely effectual, and because they created more embarrassment to transfers than better means of affording notoriety would have occasioned. We may hope ultimately to secure, by such expedients as the more advanced state of art and knowledge suggests, that notoriety as to the burthens affecting land which was sought through the doctrine of attornment, as well as that notoriety as to the ownership of the land itself which was sought through the livery of seisin.

"If a general register were established on a satisfactory footing, we think the Legislature would be led to examine whether, by some modification of the Statute of Limitations, it might not be deemed expedient and practicable to compel the assertion on the register, within a limited time, of all outstanding charges upon land not accompanied by actual enjoyment. The law, which, at some hazard and inconvenience to the rest of the community, preserves these charges to the owners, might reasonably require, on their part, the slight exertion which would be necessary to make their claims intelligible and notorious.

"We must recollect that, as to these charges, the owners of the charge and of the property charged have both an interest in having the limits clearly defined. Uncertainty as to a charge, or as to the incidence of a charge, embarrasses the owner of the land itself upon an alienation. The same uncertainty is an equal or greater embarrassment, on the like occasion, to the owner of the charge itself. He would willingly consent to have the greater part of the land discharged, upon having the burthen clearly fixed upon a sufficient portion of it. By way of substitute for the rule of the old law, which made fatal every attempt to modify a charge, we might have a system of rational provisions for apportioning such charges, or for fixing them on portions of land sufficient to secure them, analogous to the enactments which have been so convenient with reference to the rent-charges in lieu of tithes. But we think, that whatever steps may be taken in this direction can only be taken safely by the aid of maps. What is requisite in all cases is the facility of identification, by permanent evidence, of the land charged and of the land discharged. Without maps this would, we apprehend, be impracticable."

Independently of the difficulties arising from incorporeal hereditaments, the commissioners think that the difficulties and dangers arising from acts anterior to the commencement of the system of registration might be reasonably provided against by shortening the time of limitation in certain cases, as against unregistered titles, under conditions of publicity and notices, so as to accelerate the beneficial operation of the register. "The first requisite of any notice for such a purpose would be, that the land to which the title might be claimed should be clearly and distinctly shewn to the persons intended to be affected." This could only be done by means of an authorised survey and map.

The commissioners "think, also, that the use of public maps would lessen the expense of investigation of title, and conduce to conciseness as well as precision in conveyancing." The benefit derivable in this way from maps can scarcely be overrated. The greatest and most frequent difficulty in the investigation of title is the identification of the parcels. Mr. Christie says, (p. 520)—

"If you could find an ancient map that applies to the property, of course that would remove no end of difficulties which we daily encounter. In fact, I should say it is the most prevailing difficulty and imperfection in title, that you do not know that the property which you are buying is held under that title which is deduced by the abstract. I make it a general requisition, at least it is a requisition I more frequently make than any other, to have a declaration, or some evidence, that the whole of the property is held under the title deduced by the abstract, and not under some other title. This case came within my own knowledge, not within my own practice, but it came within my knowledge:—There was a beautiful title deduced through a series of family settlements, but the description never varied, and it was suggested that it was very remarkable that in an estate of such magnitude there should have been no sale, no purchase, no exchange. An inquiry was accordingly recommended, and put searchingly, and the result was, that twenty-eight new titles were produced; and, more or less, that is of constant occurrence."

We have frequently known a discussion as to the identification of a few acres of land cost eight or ten guineas in counsel's fees alone. Now, the cost of an original survey and map of an estate of 100 acres would not, in ordinary cases, exceed 5*l*. (P. 532, Captain Dawson's evidence). In a vast number of cases titles are accepted without any documentary evidence, and often without any evidence or assurance at all (except that afforded by the vendor's possession), that the title-deeds produced relate to the land agreed to be sold. The most exact and minute verbal description of land is in most cases inferior to the rudest map for the purpose of identification. The former commissioners considered the expense of a map to be an insurmountable obstacle to its use, and perhaps reasonably, as things then stood; but we cannot understand the objections, irrespective of expense, which continue to be urged by some gentlemen of experience against the use of a public map. The late Mr. Hodgson, in his examination, said, "My notion is, that nothing will supersede language in description. It is language that we must go by; nothing but language will ever produce accuracy." (P. 494). We can only express our astonishment at the assertion, that a description in words of an irregular field may identify it more accurately than a map. Mr. Hodgson objected also to the expense of using the maps when made. "How are they to be transferred to your conveyance? Suppose I wanted to convey in London a small property in Yorkshire, I must go down to see the map in Yorkshire, or they must have it copied. That must be done by a surveyor, whose charges are always heavy." This looks like wilful blindness. The large sheets of the Ordnance maps are sold (and not at a loss) for 2*s*. These are expensively engraved. Lithographed sheets of the maps to be used for conveyance and registration could be sold much cheaper. The charge at the Tithe-office for copies of maps is about 1*d*. an acre for maps of the first class, and ½*d*. or ¾*d*. an acre for maps of the second class. One of these sheets, having the subject-matter of the conveyance marked on it by colour, numbers, or symbols, would be annexed to the deed, and there would be the whole of the expense and trouble. Some of the questions put during the examinations of Captains Dawson and Yolland might well have been spared. "How would you represent Lincoln's-inn New-square, which consists of different ownerships, according to the flight or flat, with a tenancy in common of the staircase, and the ownership also, in many cases, of a small cellar going under the square, and unconnected with the building? (P. 549). Captain Dawson answered, drily, "Might not all that be matter of description?" Of course it might. The witness might as well have been asked how he would represent on the map an estate tail in an undivided twelfth part of, or the tithe-rent charged upon, an acre of land. If the map index leads the inquirer to all the documents affecting any part of the hereditaments over or under the area occupied by No. 1, New-square, he may safely be left to prosecute his inquiries further by the help of subdivisions founded on verbal descriptions, wherever the map fails. Again, Captain Yolland is asked, "How would you shew on the map, gateways, entries, or passages running under or through a house or building, and belonging to various different properties, and particularly where they are narrow and irregular, and deviating from a straight line, of which there are vast numbers?" He answers, "There is no difficulty. There are what may be termed technical methods of shewing gateways, entries, or passages running under or through buildings, and if all cannot be shewn on one map, exceptional ones may be prepared." And if not, what has that to do with the question between maps and verbal descriptions? Can the maze at Hampton Court be described by words? With a map the field of inquiry on the register may be reduced to the smallest area that can be distinctly shewn on the map, and any subdivisions beyond that may, if necessary, be traced by means of verbal descriptions. The grand mistake of those who object to a map index appears to be, that they treat the description in a conveyance by reference to a map as something specifically different from, and more binding than a verbal description would be. But that is not so; the map, like a verbal description, would be interpreted with reference to extrinsic circumstances, and if it described a crooked wall as straight, the error, being shewn by the state of the property, would not be material. With or without a registry verbal descriptions are frequently the source of great obscurity and error; with or without a registry the use of maps would greatly diminish if not annihilate such obscurity and error, and it would do this merely by the substitution of a more accurate description. If a purchaser takes his conveyance and registers by an erroneous map description, (which is very unlikely to happen), the error may be corrected as easily as if it had been expressed in words, and can be followed by no worse consequences. Nor, in fact, is a mistake on the register of any consequence at all, except in the rare and (under a good registry) almost impossible case of actual and successful fraud.

The commissioners hope that "after the use for some time of a public map for the purposes of registration, the difficulties as to the identification of parcels will wholly disappear." And after a deed containing a sufficient description of an estate by reference to the map has been registered, all subsequent deeds relating to the same estate may describe the parcels simply by reference to that deed.

The Report then considers the following objections to a map:—1. The expense. 2. The difficulty of tracing land after complicated subdivisions or variations of boundaries. 3. The difficulty of applying a description by boundaries to certain species of property. 4. The alterations which would be required in the mode of describing estates in deeds, and in the practice of conveyancing. The commissioners shew that the expense will be trifling in comparison with the benefit. As to the second objection, they truly observe, that it is in these very cases of complicated subdivisions and changes of boundaries that the utility of a map will be chiefly felt.

A verbal description by reference to occupation or to boundaries becomes useless when the occupation and the boundaries can no longer be traced; but a field delineated on an accurate map may, after all traces of its boundaries have disappeared from the land, be identified in most cases by the help of the map alone, and in every case by reference to that and to the field-books and station-marks of the original survey. Again, nothing is more easy than to provide for subdivisions and changes of boundaries. Whenever a change in the boundaries or subdivisions of the property renders the existing map inapplicable, an amended one is substituted. Upon the footing of this amended map searches will thenceforth be made, and in the course of those searches the history of the changes of the property will be necessarily and readily developed. Captain Yolland shews how readily alterations in engraved maps are now effected by the electrotype process; and lithography affords equal facilities for alterations.

The method of entering changes of the boundaries, subdivisions, or condition of an estate in the map index, is fully illustrated in the Appendix to the Report, by examples from the Belgian registry.

Advowsons, and some other of incorporeal hereditaments, cannot be represented on a map; but as they relate to certain lands or districts, they may be referred to by means of a territorial index. The existing practice with respect to the tithe-rent charges is an example of this.

The commissioners anticipate that such alterations in the practice of conveyancing as may be rendered necessary by the use of a map index will be improvements. Nevertheless they think, that, in the case of the first application of a map index, provision ought to be made for enabling persons taking transfers of property with reference to those loose descriptions (by general words, &c.) to register by means of special entries in the district indexes.

The commissioners propose to apply public maps to the purposes of registration, by dividing the country into districts of about the extent of the present unions of parishes. In each district a land index would be framed with reference to the public map. "Of such indexes the books of reference already existing in the Tithe-office, and deposited in every parish where the tithe rents have been apportioned, may be taken as illustrations." These books of reference, if simplified and consolidated, may probably be adopted for the purposes of registration. If a deed were brought for registration, and the land index contained no entry already appropriated to the specific parcels and interest affected by such deed, an entry would be made in the land index with reference to the parcels. This entry would be simply a number or mark, referring to the pages of another index, to be classified according to Mr. Duval's plan, and to be called "The Index of Titles." It would contain the particulars of the deed, the date of registration, and a reference to the place of deposit of the original in the office. Separate heads would be appropriated to each estate or title. After the reference to the head deed of a title had once been made, no further entry with respect to those parcels would be required in the land index, as the subsequent history of the title would be kept up in the index of titles under the head referred to. But in the case of alienation of part of the land comprised in the head deed, the commissioners propose to make an entry in the land index with reference to the particular property alienated, so as to avoid the necessity of specifying the same parcels in the index of titles, or of referring to the deed conveying them. Where, on an alienation of part of an estate, subdivisions not shewn in the original map are made, an entry in the land index must contain a reference to a supplement to the index, shewing by an amended, and if necessary an enlarged map, the alterations which have been made. For manors, advowsons, &c., separate heads must be provided in the land index. For some time after the commencement of the registry, general entries in the land index, without specifying any particular parcels within the district, may be necessary, to provide for the registry of conveyances, chiefly mortgages and charges, by sweeping descriptions, where the grantee may be unable to identify all the parcels. The commissioners do not anticipate much inconvenience from the allowance of such entries for a limited period, and they propose to discourage the unnecessary resort to them by imposing heavier fees.

As the land indexes in the several districts would be independent of each other, the registry might be commenced and the plan matured by experiment in a single county or district, preparatory to its extension to the rest of the kingdom. By such an experiment the question as to the practicability of using the existing maps, so far as they go, or the necessity of making a new survey, might be determined, and the system might be commenced in, or extended from time to time to, those districts which were sufficiently mapped, without waiting for the completion of a general survey. The experiment shortly to be commenced in Ireland will shew whether it will be advisable to adopt the six-inch maps of the northern counties of England, which are in the course of publication.

A separate and single index of wills for the whole country is proposed. As the time of death would generally be known, the search would, in ordinary cases, be confined within narrow limits of time. Mr. Trevor, the Comptroller of Legacy-duties, states that he has in his office copies of all wills proved and letters of administration granted since 1812, amounting to nearly a million, and that he can find any particular will with the greatest facility. Subsidiary to the index of wills would be an index of instruments of a general nature, founded on testamentary provisions, such as assignments of legacies charged on the testator's general real estate, appointments of new trustees, &c. Such instruments would be indexed under heads, to be referred to from the index of wills.

The commissioners approve of the present mode of registering and indexing judgments, lis pendens &c., and propose to extend it to other general charges by legal process, such as adjudications in bankruptcy and vesting orders in insolvency; and they hint at the expediency of curtailing the sweeping operation of judgments, &c.

With respect to the effect of registration, it is not proposed to make it essential to the validity of a conveyance, as between the parties themselves. The commissioners think it expedient to force as few documents as possible upon the attention of purchasers.

Priority of registration should give priority of title, without regard to the legal estate, and of course to the abolition of the doctrine of tacking. But some limited time should be allowed for the registration of wills, and the term of two years is proposed. Even after that period a conveyance by the heir should not be effectual as against a latent devisee, unless it were fortified by the registry of an affidavit or declaration by the heir, similar to that now required from the next of kin seeking a grant of administration.

Voluntary conveyances should not acquire any further effect from registration than they now have.

The priority given by registration to a purchaser for value, who has not been guilty of fraud, should not be defeated by notice of an unregistered title. For the grounds of this recommendation, the commissioners refer to the Report of the former commissioners. Great difficulty has, however, always been felt in deciding when a dealing with notice does, and when it does not, amount to actual fraud. (See the letter of Mr. Bell, and the examination of Mr. Swanston). Mr. Christie says, that a mere dealing with notice might be a very gross fraud. "If a party knew that the estate had been sold (and paid for) to a purchaser who had not registered his deed, and should go and get before him on the register, I should think that would be a fraud." The principal cases of difficulty are those where the notice of an adverse right is not full and distinct, but consists merely of circumstances which ought to lead to suspicion and further inquiry.

The commissioners advert to a point not considered by the former commissioners—as to the effect to be given to notice in a registered document of trusts or even legal estates declared or limited by a document which is not registered; and they propose that purchasers for value should not be affected by such notice, for the obvious reason, that if protection is desired by the parties declaring the trusts, they may have it by registering the deed which contains them; and this may be done where the reference is to a deed executed before the commencement of the register. This is an important recommendation, and will effectually relieve purchasers from the investigation of a vast number of trusts, which it would otherwise be difficult and often impossible to withdraw from their attention. And where parties creating trusts wish to protect them, but not to disclose them on the register, permission may be given to register a memorandum entitling them to notice of an intended alienation; as is now done with respect to funds in court and stock by stop orders and writs of distringas. Upon receiving such notice, the parties would have an opportunity of applying to the court, if necessary.

The commissioners propose to allow full effect to bona fide conveyances of land for value, registered before the registry of an adjudication in bankruptcy, or of the commencement of proceedings to obtain such adjudication, notwithstanding notice of a prior act of bankruptcy. They observe that the rule allowing notice of an act of bankruptcy to bind a purchaser may be useful with reference to stock-in-trade and other personal property obtainable on credit, but that it seldom happens that a dishonest insolvent possesses any real estate which is not incumbered to its full value before he commits an act of bankruptcy.

They propose that registration should be a substitute for inrolment, in all cases where inrolment is now required.

As an important auxiliary to the system of registration, the commissioners recommend the caveat suggested by the former commissioners, which is "a document to be executed by the owner of an estate, preventing registration, within a limited period, from having any effect as against an instrument to be registered within such period by the party in whose favour the caveat is given"—the caveat of course being only effectual to the extent of the interests of the party executing it. By entering such a caveat, the necessity of registering instruments of a temporary or provisional character, such as equitable mortgages, contracts, &c., would be avoided; and where the concurrence of all the parties to a deed cannot be obtained at once, the caveat may be useful.

The commissioners think that provision may be made for the withdrawal from the registry of documents relating to charges which have been satisfied, and estates or interests which have expired by lapse of time.

Lastly, they recommend the establishment of a department for the deposit of documents executed before the commencement of the registry, for the purpose merely of safe custody, and in lieu of future, and in discharge of existing, covenants for the production of them.

TRUSTEES.

The Right Hon. Lord Monteagle. Nassau W. Senior, Esq., Master in Chancery.
The Right Hon. the Lord Chief Baron. C. P. Cooper, Esq., Q.C., LL.D., F.R.S.
The Hon. Mr. Justice Coleridge. George Capron, Esq.
The Hon. Mr. Baron Rolfe.
The Hon. Mr. Justice Erie.

Policies do not become void by the Life assured going beyond the prescribed limits—so far as regards the interest of Third Parties—provided they pay the additional Premium so soon as the fact comes to their knowledge.

"Free Policies" are issued at a small increased rate of Premium, which remain in force although the Life assured may go to any part of the world.

The Tables are especially favourable to young and middle-aged Lives, and the limits allowed to the Assured, without extra charge, are unusually extensive.

Eighty per Cent. of the Profits are divided at the end of every 4th year among the Assured.

At the first division to the end of 1849, the addition to the Amount Assured averaged above 50% per Cent. on the Premiums paid.

The subjoined is a specimen Table of Bonuses added to Policies of 3000£ each, which had then been in force for Periods varying between four and five years:—

Age at Commencement.	Amount added to Policy.	Cash Payment.

LONDON, AUGUST 31, 1850.

THE Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 12 & 13 Vict. c.106, has led to several recent decisions, which we purpose to notice in the present article.

The 137th section requires that every judge's order, made by consent given by any trader defendant, authorising the plaintiff to enter up judgment, shall be filed within twenty-one days after the making of it, otherwise it shall be void to all intents and purposes whatever. This section has been held to apply to such traders only as are spoken of in the preceding sections and in the quasi preamble* to the group of sections contained between the 133rd and 138th, and therefore not to apply to a judge's order given by a trader merely as such, irrespective of any application of the bankrupt laws to his property. (Bryan v. Child, 14 Jur., part 1, p. 510).

The clauses relating to arrangements between debtors and creditors, under the control of the Court, (sects. 221—223), enable the debtor to obtain protection by his filing a petition, supported by affidavit; a private sitting is then appointed to be held, and notice hereof is to be given to every creditor, and the debtor is to file in court a full account of his debts, and the names, &c. of his creditors. If such account be not filed, his petition is to be dismissed. (Sects. 214, 223).

An arrangement made according to the statute is to be binding upon all persons who were creditors at the date of the petition, and who had notice of the several sittings of the Court, and a certificate may thereupon be granted. (Sect. 216).

The whole of these proceedings being private, the provisions as to notice require to be carefully followed; but numerous instances will occur (as in the case of outstanding negotiable instruments) where the debtor will not be acquainted with the names or residences of his creditors, and therefore will not be able to give the necessary notices. No provision has been made, as by the Insolvent Act, 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 75, for stating that the name of the holder of any negotiable security is unknown; and under that statute it has been held, that, unless such statement is inserted, the holder is not deprived of his right to sue. (Beck v. Beverley, 11 M. & W. 145). And independently of the description of the creditors, the requirements as to notice must be fulfilled. At the time of the passing of the act, it was foreseen that this difficulty would prevent many persons, who had outstanding bills, from availing themselves of the act*; and it has lately been decided by the Court of Exchequer, that the protection from arrest, under sect. 216, will not operate against the holder of a bill of exchange, unless it be clearly made out that the party holding the bill at the time of the application, under the act, was affected with notice of such application. (Levy v. Horne, 14 Jur., part 1, p. 375). But it was held to be sufficient notice of a deed of arrangement, under sects. 224, 225, where the creditor was called upon with the deed, and the purport thereof was explained to him, and he was requested to execute the same. (Marsh v. Higgins†).

* Viz. "And with respect to transactions with the bankrupt, and executions against his property, up to the time of the bankruptcy, or within a limited time previously thereto, be enacted," &c.

* See note at p. 136 of Mr. Wise's edition of the Bankruptcy Act.

† In the Common Pleas, not yet reported.

By sect. 202, any contract made by a bankrupt for securing the payment of money as a consideration for such creditor to forbear opposing, or to consent to the allowance of the bankrupt's certificate, or to forbear to petition for the recall of the same, shall be void. A case has occurred in which the consideration for the security was forbearance to oppose the final examination of the bankrupt; and this was held not to be within the section. (Taylor v. Wilson, 14 Jur., part 1, p. 336).

A few cases, lately decided, relating to the law of bankruptcy, may here be noticed, although they are not immediately connected with the new bankruptcy statute. The first is upon the subject of fraudulent preference. It had been held that the fact of pressure by the creditor was not sufficient to prevent the act of bankruptcy from being a voluntary one, if the jury believed that such pressure did not cause the transfer or payment; and, on the other hand, that it did not follow, as a matter of law, that because the first step in the transaction, resulting in the preference, was taken by the bankrupt, it was therefore voluntary. (Cook v. Pritchard, 5 Man. & G. 329; Van Casteel v. Booker, 18 L. J., Ex., 8). And it is now decided, that if the payment is made under the influence of the pressure of the creditor, and also with a desire to give a preference to him in the event of a bankruptcy, it is not fraudulent. (Brown v. Kempton, 19 L. J., C. P., 169).

The next decision relates to the competency of creditors of a bankrupt as witnesses for the assignees in an action brought against them by the bankrupt to try the validity of the fiat, and decides that, in such a case, they are competent. (Colombine v. Penhall, 14 Jur., part 1, p. 460; 19 L. J., Q. B., 302). It was contended that they were admissible at common law; but the judgment of the Court proceeded upon the ground that they are rendered competent by the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85, and are not excluded by the proviso, as being persons on whose "immediate and individual behalf" the action is defended. "The action is brought," said Patteson, J., in delivering judgment, "by the bankrupt against the assignees, for acts done by them, as the plaintiff alleged, without any lawful authority, the supposed authority not being in any respect derived from the witnesses, and they being entire strangers to the acts done, and in no way answerable in costs or otherwise;" and the Court distinguished the case from Belcher v. Braks, (2 Car. & K. 658), in which an action was brought by the assignees of a bankrupt to recover a sum paid by way of fraudulent preference; and Wilde, C. J., ruled that the creditors were not competent witnesses*.

There the money to be recovered in the action would increase the fund among the creditors, and the party in the cause and the witnesses stood in the relation to each other of trustee and cestuis que trust, at the time of the trial, in respect of the very subject-matter sought to be recovered.

THE REGISTRATION AND CONVEYANCING COMMISSION.

WE propose to conclude our somewhat lengthened notice of this important Report with a sketch of Mr. Wilson's plan for a register of title.

In a letter to Mr. Coulson, Mr. Wilson explains and defends the principle of his scheme upon abstract grounds. He contends that the right of alienation is a simple uniform right, whatever the subject-matter of it may be, and ought to be exercisable in a simple and uniform manner; that if, at a given moment, the right of alienation be shewn to reside in a given person, the simple act of transfer of that right to another (being documentary, and not the mere delivery of a chattel) ought to constitute the sole and sufficient evidence of the transferee's right, the document evidencing the now extinguished right of the former owner being cancelled. If, then, the only alienation of real property were absolute indefeasible transfers of the entire interest, they might be effected by providing the owner for the time being of the property with a certificate of his ownership, to be issued by a public officer, on which, upon an alienation, the owner would indorse an authority to the officer to cancel that certificate, and to issue a similar one to the alienee. The property would be identified by numbers, referring to a public map. Thus the transfer of absolute interests might be made with certainty and facility, the necessity for retrospective investigation of title being abolished by the expedient of requiring the issue of each new certificate of title to be preceded by the surrender and cancellation of the old one. The transition from the existing system to such a system of certificates presents some difficulties, which will be considered presently. Supposing them to have been surmounted, the plan thus far provides completely for the successive transfers of absolute interests in fee-simple. It is identical with the method now in use for transferring railway shares. But there are heirships, devises, derivative interests, charges, equities, &c. to be provided for. This may be done very simply and effectually by modifying, without departing from, the original idea. The certificate of ownership represents the precise interest which the possessor has in the property to which it relates. If he is absolute owner in fee, without incumbrance, it describes him simply as owner. If he has made a mortgage, it describes him as owner subject to a mortgage, which is indicated by stating the amount, and the name of the mortgagee, and referring to the entry in the registrar's book where the mortgage is noted up. At the same time the mortgagee possesses a certificate of his ownership of a mortgage security on the land for so much. A third person may be holder of a certificate of his title to a lease for years of the property, in which case the certificates held by the mortgagor and mortgagee will state that they hold subject to such lease. These certificates may be separately dealt with and surrendered in the same way as a certificate of absolute ownership; and so of every other limited estate or interest in land which is allowed to be represented by certificate. The plan is capable of being extended to every modification of interest allowed by the law, but it would not be necessary or expedient to do so; and Mr.

* The contrary is said to have been held by Pollock, C.B.

Wilson proposes to retain the distinction between legal and equitable interests, representing the former by certificates, and representing and protecting the latter, and also executory and contingent estates, whenever it is thought necessary, by caveats, as will be presently explained. Confining our attention for the present to vested interests represented by certificates, it will be observed that the distinctive difference between Mr. Wilson's plan and the present system is this—that whereas at present the various limited interests into which the ownership of a piece of land is carved may be evidenced by a single deed or will, or by an indivisible pleas of documents, and by proof of facts not documentary, all of which, collectively, must be proved, considered, and interpreted before the ownership of any one of such limited interests can be ascertained,—Mr. Wilson's plan provides that each interest shall be separately defined, represented, and proved by a single document appropriated to itself, and capable of being separately dealt with, without any reference to the origin or evidence of the interests of the other parties. It will be sufficient if we shew how this may be done in the cases of a descent, a devise, a mortgage, a lease, and a marriage settlement creating contingent estates and charges.

As land is subject to the payment of debts, Mr. Wilson proposes, as a convenient but not essential part of his plan, to vest the legal power of disposition in the executors or administrators. The probate or letters of administration would then be required, in addition to the certificate of the title of the deceased owner, before the registrar would accept a transfer; and it might be the registrar's duty to give certain notices, &c., for the heir's protection, before passing a transfer. If this were not done, the heir might be allowed, after having his title authenticated in some way, (as in Scotland), to obtain a certificate of title. But the case of a devise would still be unprovided for, unless a Court were authorised to put a construction upon the will, and decide at once what certificates of ownership should be issued, (provision having been made, as will be presently explained, for the issuing of certificates of partial and qualified ownerships). The objects of contingent limitations would then have to come in as their rights became vested. If the plan of vesting the legal estate in executors or administrators were adopted, Mr. Wilson thinks it would be necessary or expedient to change the mode of appointing administrators, or to appoint an official trustee; or (this is not proposed by Mr. Wilson) there might be a special executorship or administration in respect of real estate, power being given to testators to appoint executors real, in default of which, a Court, having analogous jurisdiction to that of the Ecclesiastical Court, might grant letters of administration real, in which case the heir would be protected by the usual citations, &c. The same machinery would provide for the case of a devise.

A mortgage will be effected by sending the certificate of ownership to the registrar, with instructions indorsed on it to issue a certificate of mortgage. This certificate will state the parcels, (by reference to the map), the mortgagee's name, the sum secured, the rate of interest, the time or times of payment, and whether with or without power of sale. A legislative enactment might define the rights and powers of a mortgagee, in the absence of special stipulations, to be contained, if necessary, in a deed referred to in the certificate, and registered: The mortgagor's original certificate of absolute ownership, being now inapplicable to his qualified title, is cancelled, and retained by the registrar as his authority and voucher, who copies the indorsed mortgage in a book, and issues a fresh certificate to the mortgagor, which describes him as owner "subject to a mortgage to A. B. for £—, with interest at £— per cent., as per mortgage annexed to certificate

No. —, copied in book —, p. —." In like manner, if the mortgagee is a second mortgagee, the certificate issued to him will describe his interest as subject to the first mortgage; and so whenever any interest is taken subject to any other interest capable of being or allowed to be represented by a certificate. When the mortgagor transfers his equity of redemption, he indorses a transfer on his certificate, and transmits it to the registrar, who cancels it, and issues a similar certificate to the transferee. The mortgage is transferred by a like process. In short, in accordance with the principle that the act of transfer is essentially the same, whatever the nature of the thing or interest transferred, every transfer of any interest which is allowed to be represented by certificate, is to be effected in the same way, viz. by cancelling and filing the old certificate, and issuing a new one in the name of the transferee.

When the owner grants a lease, he surrenders his certificate of absolute ownership, with the lease annexed, and takes back one of ownership, "subject to a lease to A. B. for — years, at the yearly rent of £—, as per lease annexed to certificate No. —, and copied in book —, p. —." The old certificate, with the lease annexed, is filed in the office, and copied into a book. At the same time the lessee receives a certificate that he is owner of "a lease of the property for — years, at the yearly rent of £—, as per lease annexed to certificate," &c.

If a lease is granted by a mortgagor and mortgagee, or other persons having different certified interests in the property, each one surrenders his certificate, and takes back another, expressed to be subject to the lease. On the other hand, if the lease is granted only by a person having a limited interest, the certificate expresses that the lease is subject to the interests of those parties who have not joined in it.

The provision for the case of a settlement, creating trusts, charges, and contingent and executory interests, must be introduced by the observation, that at the present moment the largest estates are commonly, and without any hesitation, settled and limited in such a way as to be at any moment saleable by the trustees for the time being, with the concurrence of the tenant for life, if living, and after his death, and during the minority of the tenant in tail in possession, at their discretion; the propriety of any exercise of the power being questionable only as against the trustees, and not as against an innocent purchaser from them. Occasionally settlers and testators object to the insertion of such a power, and sometimes the power is not extended to the principal mansion and demesnes. But these are exceptional cases, for which, as we shall see, special provision may be made. In a large majority of cases, settled estates are, in effect, so limited that three or four persons named in the settlement, or their assignees, have an absolute power of alienation, for the due exercise of which they are answerable in equity, but which is without control, so far as purchasers are concerned. In ordinary cases an estate settled according to Mr. Wilson's plan would be in substantially the same position. He proposes, that on a settlement the trustees shall receive a certificate of ownership as trustees of the settlement, with a reference to a copy of the settlement in the registrar's book. This, he says, would give notice of the settlement, and of the powers contained in it; and any person taking directly from the trustees, in contravention of the settlement, would take with notice of a fraud or breach of trust, and so would take subject to the settlement. But as he would take a simple certificate of ownership, not referring to the settlement, a purchaser from him, without actual notice, would be safe. Now, Mr. Wilson appears to think that the consequence of the first transferee taking with notice would be some check upon the abuse of the power by the trustees. But that would not be so, for the trustees, intending to commit a breach of trust, or to sell without affording the purchaser an opportunity of investigating their power of sale, would, as a matter of course, first execute a formal transfer to a nominee or nominees, whose title to sell would then appear upon the certificate to be unqualified. But effectual checks may, as Mr. Wilson has shewn, be provided. These checks are to be effected partly by means of caveats, and partly by giving to the registrar or to a public trustee a quasi judicial power; i. e. the same kind of power which trustees having a power of sale now possess. Authority might be given to settlers to make the registrar a kind of protector of the settlement.

The caveats are designed to provide for the creation and protection of equitable interests of every kind, for Mr. Wilson proposes to allow of every variety of ownership or interest in real property that is at present recognised, varying only the mode of protecting and dealing with such interests. Any person is to be at liberty to enter a caveat in the register office against any property, entitling him to short notice of any intended alienation, at the peril of an action for costs, and perhaps for damages, if he do so without cause. If he produce to the registrar (to be filed in the office) satisfactory documentary evidence of his right to notice, the caveat will entitle him to "full notice," which may give him a considerable time, say four or five years, from the service of the notice, within which time a purchaser from the holder of a certificate of absolute ownership would take, subject to the equitable rights, if any, of the party entering the caveat. The caveat would be entered in the registrar's index against the property, and immediate notice of it ought to be sent to the registered owner, in order that he may, if he think fit, apply to have it discharged, primary jurisdiction being given to the registrar to hear and decide such questions, subject to an appeal to a Court of law or equity. (Mr. Wilson gives forms for these proceedings). And certificates of ownership, issued during the subsistence of the caveat, might be expressed to be subject to it.

The party entering the caveat would receive a certificate of being entitled to short or full notice, in respect of the particular property. This certificate would represent his equitable title, and would be capable of being transferred, mortgaged, settled, &c., in the same manner as a certificate of legal ownership. On the determination of the equitable title, the certificate would generally be got in, and the caveat cancelled; and if this were neglected, the worst inconvenience would be, that a sale could not be completed without investigating the equitable title, which, by means of the outstanding caveat, would be brought to the purchaser's notice.

The only difficulty in the system of caveats is to provide for the effectual service of the notice. Mr. Wilson proposes that a large official letter, indorsed "On her Majesty's service," or otherwise, should be sent three or four times by the post to the address mentioned in the caveat. But it is obvious that death and change of residence must often render such services ineffectual. The risk may be lessened by naming two or three persons on the caveat as quasi trustees for the equitable owner, to each of whom the notices should be sent—one of them might be his solicitor. There might also be advertisements in newspapers. And when it is considered that it is only in the improbable case of a trustee intending to attempt (with the purchaser's concurrence) a fraudulent disposition of the property, in defiance of the chance of detection by means of the caveat and the notices founded on it, that it would become necessary to send a notice at all, the risk of failure will appear to be very inconsiderable. The rule will be, that a trustee, before he attempts to sell, will consult all the parties whose consent is, in equity, material. It will be the exception where he omits to do so, and brings the caveat into operation. Generally the first notice would bring a communication from the cestui que trust, and if no answer were returned, an honest purchaser would at once be put upon inquiry. It might be made a part of the plan to require an answer to be returned within a week, under a small penalty; and if no answer were returned within that time, it might be made the registrar's duty to inquire on the spot whether the party was dead, or had changed his residence, and in such case to take such steps as he should deem expedient for the protection of the equitable interest.

The application of this machinery to settlements and wills is obvious. Every particular estate, equitable interest or charge, limited to a person in existence, which the settlor or testator might not choose to place in the power of the trustees, would be protected by a caveat in the name of such person. The caveat would be entered at the time of making the settlement; or, in the case of a will, the testator would direct it to be entered—a direction which the registrar would be bound to attend to. Contingent estates and interests would, as we collect from Mr. Wilson's statement, be placed under the protection of the registrar or of an official trustee; but he does not explain how this would be worked out. Very simple machinery would be sufficient. Thus, if it were required to protect future children in respect of a contingent estate tail limited to the eldest son, and portions limited to the other children, the caveat might require notice to be given "to the tenant in tail for the time being under an indenture of settlement, dated" &c., and "to the second and other sons and the daughters of A. B. and C. D., their executors or administrators." After the entry of such a caveat it would be the registrar's duty not to pass a transfer of the legal estate without being satisfied, by strict evidence, that all the persons referred to in the caveat had come into existence and were sui juris, and that due notices had been served on them.

There is one other mode of gaining a title which requires to be specially provided for—that by adverse possession. Adverse possession ought, of course, to be as good a defence against a registered title as it now is against a legal title. But the title so gained would not be complete without registry; and Mr. Wilson proposes to give an "action of adverse possession" against the registered owner, which, if successfully prosecuted, would entitle the owner by adverse possession to have the registered title cancelled, and a certificate of ownership issued to himself. The action is to be commenced by a writ requiring the registrar to send notices at intervals, for a certain time, to the holder of the registered title, acquainting him that some one else has claimed the property by adverse possession. "I propose that this should be done for twenty years; that is to say, there should be one notice immediately, then a yearly notice for five years, and then a notice once every fifth year for other fifteen years, making nine notices altogether, with an equal number of advertisements. I have mentioned twenty years in order not to propose any alteration in the present law. My own opinion, however, is, that twenty years would be a great deal too long." If the registered owner appear to the action, no further notices are to be sent. The meaning of this provision for notices may be thus explained:—The plaintiff has already acquired, or supposes that he has acquired, a title by possession; but as that title depends on facts incapable of being satisfactorily proved ex parte, there must be superadded, as the basis of a documentary title, a further period of adverse possession, which may be so proved, analogous to the old fine and proclamation, namely, a period of enjoyment under a public and official assertion of title by adverse possession, which, if false, (i. e. if the enjoyment has not been had at all, or if it has been had by virtue of a particular estate), will, it may be presumed, be controverted by the persons whose title is threatened. In the meantime, the title, such as it is, of the person in possession may be transferred, Mr. Wilson says, by deed, and may be protected by caveat. Perhaps a better plan would be to give him a special certificate of ownership under a claim of title by adverse possession, which, on the expiration of the probationary period, might be exchanged for an ordinary certificate.

In following out the analogy of our existing law, the period of twenty years for notice should not commence, as against remaindermen and reversioners, appearing to be such on the register, until their estates fall into possession; but reversioners or remaindermen expectant on leases or particular estates not registered might for this purpose be reasonably treated as estates in possession.

We now come to the mode of starting the register into operation. Mr. Wilson's explanations on this point are not very clear to us. He suggests, that so important an alteration in the law and practice of conveyancing would attract general attention, and that it would be reasonable to require all persons claiming any interest in land—whether in possession or reversion, at law or in equity, by way of estate or by charge—to register their claims within a limited period from the commencement of the system. He proposes ten years. The certificates taken out during this period would only shew a presumptive title, and would require to be fortified, as at present, by a retrospective investigation of the prior title. He would have the provisional registration take place parish by parish—one of the vice-registrars, after sufficient public notice, going down to a particular parish, and registering all the lands there, without any examination of title-deeds; in undisputed cases, taking the person preferring himself as owner; in disputed cases, registering the person in possession or receipt of the rents, if the dispute is between two persons, each claiming the absolute ownership, and registering in the name of an official trustee, who might be the registrar, if the dispute is between parties claiming different interests under a settlement—between a tenant for life and a remainderman, for instance. So long as the title stands in the name of the official trustee, Mr. Wilson proposes to let in additional claims, and not to allow the period of limitation to commence until, by consent of all the conflicting claimants, a transfer has been made from the official trustee to one of them, or to trustees for them. This would furnish a motive to all parties to compound their differences. All unclaimed property would also be placed to the name of an official trustee. Thus the whole of the parish would get on to the register. In his last examination he states this somewhat differently:—

"The first registration would be only provisional, and persons having adverse claims would be allowed a sufficient time to come in and register them—say five years, with a moderate extension, limited to an extreme period of twenty years from the date of the registration, in favour of persons under disabilities. During these twenty years the register would be a convenient instrument of transfer, and would be relied upon more and more every year as a presumptive title. At the end of the prescribed period the machinery would be in full operation, and the whole title would appear upon the register. Our system might thus be introduced without any investigation of existing titles, or interference with existing rights." (P. 535).

We think that Mr. Wilson's expectation of getting entirely rid of retrospective investigations of title within a period of ten or twenty years from the establishment of his register cannot be realised, unless, indeed, the adoption of his scheme is postponed until after the registry proposed by the commissioners has been in operation for some thirty or forty years, so as to furnish tolerably complete materials for commencing the certificate system upon the basis of a judicial investigation of the then existing titles. After a good registry of title-deeds has been in operation for a considerable time, there can be little objection to such an investigation; under existing circumstances it would be utterly impracticable; nor does Mr. Wilson propose it. But the establishment of an invariable period of limitation against all claims and titles, without distinction, is equally impracticable, whether the period be ten, twenty, sixty, or even one hundred years. The law allows an estate to be so limited that it may not absolutely vest in any person until after the expiration of twenty-one years from the death of some person in being when the limitation is made. By a strange blunder of the judges who have settled the rule which prohibits limitations more remote than this, the period of twenty-one years is irrespective of infancy, and the estate, when it does vest, may vest in an infant newly born, or even merely procreated and unborn. Thus, taking 100 years as the possible duration of a life, the law allows of limitations which may possibly suspend the vesting of an estate for a period 121 years, and may suspend its vesting in a person capable of dealing with it for 142 years; and even then there may be a succession of infancies. Again, the law allows the creation of long terms of years at nominal rents, or without rent; and beneficial terms for long periods are not uncommon. But no statute of limitation has hitherto allowed a remainderman or reversioner to be affected by the wrongful possession of another before the time limited for the enjoyment of the remainder or reversion in possession, and no attempt to do so would be endured. It is true that titles are seldom, or rather never, investigated to the extent which is necessary to give absolute assurance of safety; for even if the investigation were carried back for 500 years, it is possible that the possession during the whole of that time may have been had under a mere term still unexpired. The expense, and often the impossibility, of carrying back the investigation of titles much beyond the usual period of sixty years, have obliged parties to make a compromise between expediency and caution. But this is done at the risk of the purchaser, for the law does not allow a legal title to be defeated by any means, except adverse possession for at least twenty years after the commencement of the title in possession. Notwithstanding the admitted incompleteness of the investigation of a vendor's title under the existing system, very few cases of the eviction of a purchaser have occurred; though we question whether, under the present reckless practice of purchasing under conditions of sale which practically preclude the purchaser from any effective investigation of the title, such cases are not likely to be much more frequent than they have been. Whatever the risk may be, it must continue to be borne by the purchaser; no interference with the protection now afforded to the owners of deferred estates and interests, and to persons under disability, must be attempted. Subject to this qualification, and with proper remedies, as proposed by Mr. Wilson, for persons aggrieved by wrongful entries on the register, we think that the system might be brought into operation without much difficulty. For a considerable period the title prior to the commencement of the register would be investigated as at present, but the growth of abstracts would be arrested for ever, and every year would draw a lengthening veil over the commencement of them. In the meantime the advantage of a simple and inexpensive form of conveyance in the ordinary operations of sales, mortgages, leases, &c. would not be inconsiderable.

We shall conclude with some miscellaneous explanations and extracts from Mr. Wilson's examination. As to the suggested probability of a map ceasing to represent the existing features of the land, he says, (after suggesting that the map might be the basis of a valuation for the purposes of local taxation, as has been proposed for Ireland)—

"I have not, however, inserted the valuation in these forms, and I only refer to the subject for the purpose of saying, (as I heard Mr. Symonds, the Registrar of Metropolitan Buildings, say one day), that if you could make a public map of this kind useful for a number of different purposes, you would insure its correctness for each separate purpose. If you had the clergyman referring to it continually for his tithes—if you had the overseer referring to it for the poor-rates—if you had solicitors, for instance, referring to it for their charges, [a per-centage, we presume, on the value], and other classes of persons continually referring to it for purposes of conveyancing—the map could never remain wrong, because, if it were wrong, the error would be found out directly by some one or other." (P. 844).

Equitable Mortgages.—For a temporary loan, the owner simply deposits the certificate, with a short memorandum of deposit. "I would thus accomplish an object which appears to me to be a very important one, namely, that of preserving the doctrine of equitable mortgages while removing its inconvenience; for you will observe that here is no false credit whatever. The credit is attached by this machinery to the possessor of the certificate. If, then, a man has parted with his certificate, he derives no legitimate credit from his land; so that we escape entirely from the inconvenience of giving a false credit by allowing a secret pledge."

Little danger of forgery is to be apprehended. It would be impossible without access to the certificate for the time being in force; for the registrar will keep counterparts of all the certificates issued in a private day-book, constituting the legal register for the parish. Each leaf of this book will be a printed blank form, identical with the blank form which Mr. Wilson proposes to employ for every variety of legal certificate. The leaves will be numbered consecutively, and will be filled up in order as the business of the office proceeds. Each certificate which is issued will refer to the number of the leaf of the book in which it is copied. Thus the certificate of A. B.'s mortgage may be numbered 74; but before the mortgage is transferred, many other entries will have been made in the book, and on a transfer to C. D. the certificate may bear the number 256. No one, therefore, from merely having access to or knowing the number of A. B.'s certificate, could forge C. D.'s certificate.

The existing causes of the length of a conveyance are such:—"I take it you may have a valid conveyance in these terms—'I, A. B., grant to C. D. and his heirs such a property.' If, then, deeds are long, it is either because of the retrospective title, which leads to recitals; or because of the imperfection of the mode of description, which leads to long parcels; or because of the uncertainty of the title conveyed, which leads to covenants for title. There is no occasion to change the form of conveyance to make it simple, because it is simple already. What you want is, to change the circumstances which give rise to special and complicated additions to the legal form essentially required." (P. 538).

Again. "Supposing I hold property subject to trusts at this moment, it is clear that that property may be so circumstanced as to be inalienable, if the law carries out what it ought. And therefore I would leave such property inalienable still; only I would so alter the means by which it is made inalienable as to render its inalienability compatible with the free alienation of property which is not under trust. The object is, not to make settled property alienable, unless the parties choose to make it so by their own affirmative act, but only to prevent the machinery of settlements from rendering unsettled property well nigh inalienable, through the complications and difficulties of titles and conveyances." (P. 503). G. S.

COMMENTARIES OF THE LAWS OF ENGLAND. A New Edition, with copious Notes embracing all the Changes in the Law. The whole of the Text is preserved; such of the Annotations of the late J. CHITTY, Esq., as were considered useful, have been retained; and the Four Volumes have received extensive Additions by the following Gentlemen:—Vol. I., by JOHN F. HARGRAVE, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn; Vol. II., by GEORGE SWEET, Esq., of the Inner Temple; Vol. III., by RICHARD COUCH, Esq., of the Middle Temple; Vol. IV., by W. N. WELSBY, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barristers at Law.

In Six very thick octavo Volumes, price 6l. 10s. in strong cloth bds., BURN'S JUSTICE OF THE PEACE AND PARISH OFFICER. The Twenty-ninth Edition, corrected and greatly enlarged, containing the Statutes and Cases to 7 & 8 Vict., inclusive, with a New Collection of Precedents. The Title "Poor" by Mr. Commissioner BERE, of the Exeter District Court of Bankruptcy; the rest of the Work by THOMAS CHITTY, Esq., of the Inner Temple.

On introducing a new and greatly improved edition of an old-established book, like "Burn's Justice," to the notice of the Members of the Magistracy and the Legal Profession, the Publishers need only point attention to the claims which it has upon two such large and influential bodies, to ensure a success similar to that which has attended all previous editions. Since the year 1837 (the date of the last edition) a considerable number of important Statutes have been passed; by several of those Statutes the executive power of the Magistrate has been somewhat restricted, and by others extended, while the whole duties of the office have undergone too many changes not to render a New Edition (embodying every Act and decision to the present time) a valuable and necessary addition to the Libraries of Gentlemen engaged in the Local Administration of Justice. The Six Volumes have received a thorough revision; the Forms have been re-modelled, and carefully adapted to the recent changes; several new Titles (created by modern enactments) have been introduced, and great exertions have been made to ensure a correct and full development of the Law as it now stands. The title "Poor," which occupies the whole of the Fourth Volume, has again been prepared by Mr. Commissioner Bore; and his object has been to furnish the cases at full length, being satisfied that no compendious abstract, however carefully made, would supply a satisfactory Manual for those who attend the Quarter Sessions. The Marginal Notes and the Index are, however, abridgments of the Cases, so that the general principles of the Law may be ascertained without reading the fuller statement. The great utility of the Work as an authority, presenting the cases in detail, and superceding the Reports themselves, is thereby preserved, at the same time that the necessity of reading the whole is obviated by the fulness of the Marginal Note.

- First.—The security of a large subscribed Capital.
- Second.—Exemption of the Assured from all liability.
- Third.—Tables of Premiums calculated on the true law of mortality, expressly for this Office, and affording particular advantages to young lives.
- Fourth.—Participating and Non-participating Scales of Premiums. In the former the Assured are entitled to EIGHTY PER CENT. or FORTY-FIFTHS of the profits periodically, (without deduction for interest on capital or guarantee fund), either by way of addition to the sum assured, or in diminution of Premium, at the option of the Assured.
- Fifth.—Policies INDISPUTABLE, except in case of fraud.
- Sixth.—This Society gives a much larger share of profits to the Assured, and at a lower rate of Premium, than the great majority of other Life Offices.
- Seventh.—Parties wishing to assure their lives without participating in the profits can do so on a lower scale of Premiums than that of a large proportion of other Offices.

Assurances may be effected through any respectable Solicitor, or by application to

CHARLES JOHN GILL, Secretary.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 7, 1850.

WE return to the question of the separation of the judicial from the political functions of the Lord Chancellor—a question on which it will be well that the Profession should reflect between this and the next session of Parliament, as it will in all probability be then brought forward.

The plan of separation which it is said is likely to find most favour with public men is Lord Cottenham's; and Lord Cottenham's plan, as detailed in his bill of April, 1836, was in substance simply this—to leave the office of Lord Chancellor subsisting, but to appoint a permanent Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Chancery, and thenceforth to withdraw from the Lord Chancellor all jurisdiction in that court; to leave to the Lord Chancellor the judicial duty of sitting in the House of Lords on appeals, and to add to his judicial duties that of presiding in the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council; and provision was of course to be made for separating the processes under the Court of Chancery from those under the Great Seal, and for apportioning between the Lord Chancellor and the Lord Chief Justice in Chancery the official staff &c. attached to the Chancellor's office.

Of this plan, we can only say that it appears to us about the worst mode of carrying into effect a pernicious object that has been proposed; and we may say this without any great charge of presumption, because, although Lord Cottenham's reputation as a judge is beyond all question, and consequently his opinion on any matter purely judicial is of the greatest weight, he never distinguished himself by any manifestation of great administrative or political ability; and the question under consideration policy.

The objection to Lord Cottenham's plan is a true juste mille Chancellor who will be Judge in Equity who neither office will be of men of the very highest probability, fall, if not in supremacy as to render value for the public service.

The office of Chief Justice is distinct from that of Lord Chancellor to be a very unnecessary

It must not be forgotten that the Chief Justice is a judge of appeal, a judge of co-ordinate jurisdiction with the Lord of the Rolls and the Vice-Chancellor. As a judge of appeal, he is of any public value, to be the man of the greatest power, not merely by power, not merely by the mental accomplishment, education and subsequent character—but all these, a large capacity, great force of character, and great physical strength, the services of the men superior to their brethren in all these qualities, to be at all regularly commensurate with the position as it will be at the office of Chief Justice in two thousands a year, more in advance in the tables of honor with men of that high and business, which fit them to preside over and rule the judgments of others, themselves necessarily very able men. It is not a gentle, quiet, and abundantly-paid labour that attracts such men, but it is the stir and bustle of a life at once political and official; it is the accumulation upon them of a mass of business which none but a giant hand can grasp; it is the consciousness that they are called to do the work of giants, and that their doing so gives them a power among their fellow-citizens that no amount of mere salary or nominal rank could give; it is, we say, these things that do attract the sort of men out of which chiefs are to be made: and if the functions of the Chief Judge in Chancery are to be frittered down to those of a mere judge, however honourable that position is, it will not, we repeat, command the services of such men as the public ought to have.

So with regard to the office of the proposed Lord Chancellor; what will he be? He will be Speaker of the House of Lords—a position which, alone, however honourable, would be as much to the taste of any man of high capacity and great energy as the throne designed by Sieyès was to that of Napoleon. He will be a judge of the House of Lords, as the court of appellate jurisdiction—again a position of much honour, but of little business, and very divided responsibility. And even if to these functions be added (as is not likely) the presidency of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, the Lord Chancellor will still be but a very diminished luminary, and will be so far from being the first lay subject of the realm, in reality, that call him what we will—let him have what technical rights of precedence he may, his office will not have attached to it that amount of weighty business, that amount of substantial power and importance, which will attract men of the greatest capacity into or out of the ranks of the Bar.

Further: as a question almost of detail, it is very doubtful whether, on these terms, a Lord Chancellor will be at all obtainable, of sufficient legal pre-eminence for the duties of his office as judge in the House of Lords; because it is more than probable, that, under such new regulations, the offices of Chief Judge in Chancery and of Chief Judges in the other courts will be so much more attractive to good lawyers than that of Lord Chancellor, that the appeal from the Chief Judge in Chancery, or from the Court of Exchequer Chamber to the House of Lords, will be something like an appeal from a Vice-Chancellor to a Master in Chancery.

The whole scheme of dividing the office of Lord Chancellor is, in fact, we conceive, one great mistake. If it be not to the public interest to attract into the ranks of the Bar, out of which the administrators of justice to the people are to be selected, the best and most energetic heads that are to be found among the endowed and unendowed classes, then we admit that it may be wise to abolish the office of Lord Chancellor as a legal office of any kind, and to remodel altogether the appellate jurisdiction of the House of Lords. But if it be for the interest of the public that the Profession of the law should be so constituted as to be at this day what the Church was, the instrument by which the Crown may obtain, for the service of the State, that talent which Nature scatters among the obscure as well as among the endowed classes, then we contend that a better scheme for obtaining such results, than to create a Lord Chancellor, if he did not already exist, could not be devised. In any view of the subject, the division of the office is, we conceive, a political mistake of the greatest obtuseness. The office should be wholly destroyed, or left wholly subsisting.

GENERAL PRINCIPLES AND CONDITIONS UPON WHICH CHARTERS OF INCORPORATION AND LETTERS-PATENT, UNDER 1 VICT. c. 73, ARE GRANTED.

As the very extensive, and in some cases surprising, ignorance which prevailed for some time after the passing of the Joint-stock Companies Registration Act, as to the effect of complete registration to limit the liability of the shareholders, has been dispelled by a somewhat dear-bought experience, and as the results of the late decisions will, as Creswell, J., observed, make such companies rather worse than better off than they were before, a desire thus arises among the promoters of such undertakings to obtain the degree of limited liability and other advantages which are secured to joint-stock companies incorporated by royal charter, or privileged by letters-patent, under the stat. 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 73. It may therefore be useful to give a short statement of the course to be pursued for obtaining a charter of incorporation or letters-patent, and of the general principles and conditions upon which the privileges and advantages conferred by the same are granted.

In the first place, then, the objects contemplated must be, first, of great public utility; and, secondly, either too large for individual enterprise, or too hazardous for individual enterprise without limited liability.

It is declared by the 4th section of the stat. 1 Vict. c. 73, that the letters-patent may provide that the members of the company shall be individually liable for the engagements of the company, to such extent only per share as shall be limited by such letters-patent. We believe it is not unusual to place the limit at double the amount of the capital proposed to be subscribed.

The Joint-stock Companies Registration Act, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, applies, as to provisional registration, to companies to be privileged by letters-patent, or incorporated by royal charter. (7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, ss. 23, 58). It will therefore be necessary for the promoters of those companies to comply with the general directions for obtaining provisional registration.

After obtaining a certificate of provisional registration, the first step to be taken by the promoters of these companies is a petition to the Queen in Council. The statements in the petition are not of importance. A simple reference to the charter prepared by the petitioner's solicitor, and sent at the same time, would probably be sufficient. It is in every case, however, desirable to have a previous communication, made personally or by letter, in the ordinary way, to the departments of the State affected; as, in colonial matters, to the Colonial office, and in the case of a trading company, to the Board of Trade. Whenever such application shall have been made, and referred by her Majesty to the Board of Trade, or the Colonial or other office, as the case may be, then, before any report shall be made to her Majesty, and before any such letters-patent or charter shall be granted, notice of such application shall be inserted, by the parties applying, three several times in the London Gazette, and in one or more of the newspapers circulating within the country or place in which it is proposed that the principal place of business of the company shall be established, at intervals of not less than one week. (1 Vict. c. 73, s. 32).

The minutes of evidence before the Select Committee of the House of Commons on Investments for the Savings of the Middle and Working Classes contain some valuable information as to the expense and difficulty of getting a charter. The following is an extract from Mr. J. M. Ludlow's evidence on this subject:—

"42. You are aware that it is difficult to obtain a charter?—It is very difficult and expensive. There is some regulation which states, that, after the first three names, you have to pay a certain sum for every other name. That is one of the great burthens.

"43. Is it within your knowledge that there was a plan for making a model lodging-house in this metropolis, which was to be made in the best way, was intended to pay a moderate interest, and for which purpose a number of gentlemen joined together, and that it was impeded until they could get a charter of limited responsibility?—I am quite aware of that, and also that the expense of those charters was something enormous, 800*l.* or 900*l.*

"44. They were delayed for a considerable time, and at last a great expense was incurred, was there not?—Yes."

Mr. Edward Vansittart Neale produced to the committee an accurate copy of the expenses of various kinds incurred in obtaining a charter.

"386. Chairman.—Do you produce a return of the cost that it is necessary to incur in obtaining a charter?—Yes.

"390. Is that an accurate copy of the expenses of various kinds incurred in procuring a charter to limit the liability of the members of the Metropolitan Association?—Yes; I was with Mr. Gatliff, and compared it with the entries in the books.

"391. The cost of obtaining a charter for the purpose of this Metropolitan Association for assisting the poor upon a system of limited liabilities appears to have been upwards of 1000*l.*?—Yes, including the law charges of 724*l.* 10*s.* 8*d.* in pure fees to the Crown officers."

These expenses and difficulties have led many persons to consider the limited liability which is conferred by an act of incorporation or royal charter as an aristocratic privilege. Thus, Mr. Joseph Millbank, a witness examined by the Select Committee, says, "When masters associate, they associate with limited liability, by obtaining an act of incorporation—a thing too expensive for working men."

Mr. H. Bellenden Ker, in the course of his examination, made the following important statement:—"I think that where a business or an undertaking of any kind is such that it either requires a very large capital, or the undertaking is hazardous, and therefore persons are unwilling to invest their capital in the undertaking, or where the business is such that it is managed by directors, there, if the object be reasonable and fair, I think limited liability should be allowed. Hitherto, in this country, owing to the expense of charters, and owing to the expense of acts of Parliament, this limited liability has become a sort of aristocratic privilege, and only conferred upon those to whom 500*l.* or 1000*l.* is of no importance, they having a very large capital; and I am certain that the privilege of limited liability might be extended with very great advantage to much smaller companies and much smaller undertakings than those to which such charters or acts of Parliament are granted. I will mention a case that is now before me. Some merchants gave the Government a large sum of money for a portion of the Falkland Islands, and the right to the cattle there; they paid 10,000*l.* down, and they are to pay 20,000*l.* more in a short time. They found that it would be convenient to them if they could get 100,000*l.* more capital to lay out in that concern. They consulted me as the adviser of the Board of Trade, and I said, that although the Board usually will not grant a charter where the capital is small, yet, if it finds persons willing to lay out 100,000*l.* in the Falkland Islands, I should think that there could not be a doubt about its being granted. If they had gone there with a million capital, with fair names for directors, there could be no doubt about the grant being made; but in the case of the smaller capital, the charter was refused. I certainly think there is great injustice done, because I believe if the test, as I said before, is not an ordinary partnership, but a partnership either hazardous in its business, or such as a railway, or a bridge, or a road, that can be easily managed by directors, there I think the privilege ought to be given at a much less expense, and not as a matter of favour, as it is now; of course there being a forum to judge of the expediency and safety of the undertaking, and also of course there being provisions, very similar to those provisions which are now contained in acts of Parliament for railroads and other bills, to prevent fraud and mismanagement."

And Mr. J. M. Ludlow's evidence is very much to the same effect. Mr. Ludlow says—"I will mention one fact, which shews that unlimited liability is not a pledge of that security and caution which it has very often been assumed to be. Almost always, whenever any very high people think of entering into a company, they go at once to the Board of Trade for a charter, or to the House of Commons for an act of incorporation; and that shews that they consider it safer to trade under a limited liability than under an unlimited liability; and what is more, if sufficiently solvent and powerful, their charter is mostly granted to them." And he adds, in answer to a question immediately afterwards—"I may say, that whenever anybody has come to advise with me on the propriety of embarking in a joint-stock company with unlimited liability, my advice has always been, do not meddle with it in the least."

Mr. Ludlow's evidence, too, is particularly valuable on the subject of partnership en commandite. He says—"I think the form of limited partnership, which is called the commandite, where a few partners are liable without limit, and the liability of the rest is limited to their subscriptions, has some advantages. But I think, with reference to any numerous partnership, it is exceedingly dangerous, and that there you want absolutely limited liability. The result in France, as I understand—and I have resided many years in that country—has been, as respects all joint-stock companies en commandite, i. e. where the capital is divided into shares, that the acting members are usually men of straw, and they are the only ones who can be found to take upon themselves the responsibility of a concern of several hundred thousand francs, which is almost the same as so many pounds in this country. It will be observed here, that I attribute the evil, not to the amount of limited liability brought into a firm or partnership, but, on the contrary, to the amount of unlimited liability which is left; and that particular clause which has been referred to, which prohibits any member trading under limited liability from taking the least share in the affairs of a concern, has been productive of very great evil in France. There is the celebrated case of Marshal Macdonald, I believe, who had to pay 1,200,000 francs for merely signing a letter; it was decided that it was an act of management, and it made him liable without limit."

And again:—

"119. Chairman.—You have stated, have you not, that this law of limited liability prevails in France, Holland, Belgium, Prussia, Italy, Spain, and America?—Yes.

"120. Are you aware of any complaints having been made of evils arising from it in those countries?—I am aware of many complaints having arisen as respects the form of commandite, where partners of unlimited liability are retained, so that, where the engagements of the company are large, they put a man of straw at the head.

"121. That is with respect to the unlimited portion, and not the limited portion, is it not?—Yes.

"122. Are you of opinion, with the experience that we have of the working of this law in other countries, and with the views we now entertain with respect to the necessity of caution, that a law might be framed in this country admitting of limited liability, and yet which would eschew and avoid some of the difficulties that have been met with in other countries?—I should not see any difficulty in framing such a law. It might be made very simple indeed, providing, in the first place, for complete notice to the public by the addition to the name or style of the partnership, of the words, "with limited liability," so that it could not be treated with otherwise under any pretence; by the registration of the original capital, and of any additional issue of capital, and by the registration of all transfers of shares, until they were fully paid up; and by the publication or registration of yearly or half-yearly balance-sheets."

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 14, 1850.

THE New Orders in Chancery have had now a trial of nearly three months, and though that time has not been long enough to test their ultimate operation, it has been long enough to shew, first, that they are in principle very valuable; and, secondly, that in detail they are very incomplete. It has become sufficiently apparent, that, for all suits in equity where discovery is not required from the defendant, the old bill and answer are doomed, and will not much longer be seen on the records of the Court of Chancery; but it is not yet apparent whether they are not equally doomed in all cases; nor is it yet apparent how the New Orders can be worked in complicated cases, nor to what extent they will require additions and alterations. It is, however, certain that much will be required to be done to them before they can at all completely be adapted to effectuate the new system of pleading, of which they are the germ. On some points, on which it might have been expected that the New Orders would be particularly explicit, they are studiously obscure; and hence much effort has been made by the Profession to avoid tempting adverse decision, and much effort by the Bench to avoid expressing an opinion upon any point not absolutely requiring decision; so that, in the result, many things, to which possibly the New Orders were intended to apply, have not been attempted under them.

At the first start of the New Orders, the difficulty arose, whether or not a prayer for an injunction in a claim, can be maintained. The arguments which have suggested themselves on this subject to our minds, and to those of many other equity lawyers, are before our readers in antecedent numbers of this Journal, and we are not going to repeat them. Shortly before the vacation, a special claim, praying an injunction against executors, was allowed to be filed by the Master of the Rolls, but with an express disclaimer of any opinion whether it could or could not be sustained. (Gordon v. Gordon, 7th August, 1850). Whether any order has since been made upon it, we have been unable to ascertain. The point is very important, and ought to be dealt with explicitly, by the addition of an order expressly permitting, or expressly forbidding, the granting injunctions upon claims. So, with regard to the granting of a receiver, the Orders are silent, and great conflict of opinion exists in the Profession. Orders have been made by consent for receivers; but we believe no such order, as an hostile order, has yet been made.

VOL. XIV.

Again, with regard to the evidence requisite to sustain a claim, the Orders are silent; and if the case is, that the defendant does not appear to shew cause, the practice of different branches of the Court has been different: one branch requiring an affidavit in support of the plaintiff's claim to entitle him to any decree; another branch not requiring such affidavit for a decree to account. On this question, also, the Orders require to be rendered more explicit, and a very few words would suffice to make them so.

As to what may and will be done under the 13th Order, in a hostile suit, or whether the Orders are intended at all for really hostile suits, there is yet no experience—the general feeling of the uncertainty of the construction of the New Orders, having tended to very much dissuaded draftsmen from ~~raising claims in~~ really hostile and complicated cases; and the difficulty of seeing how precisely to proceed, having very much checked the progress of even those suits in which adventurous draftsmen have thought ~~to proceed~~ claim; so that how claims will be workable after issue is joined, if there be anything more than an account to be taken, is yet to be found out. Whether, for instance, if a plaintiff wishes discovery, and were to file a claim, stating such facts as would entitle him to interrogate if it were a bill, he will be able, under the 13th Order, to obtain leave to exhibit interrogatories for the examination of the defendant, has not been decided. No one has yet, we believe, ventured to try the experiment; and the language of the 13th Order in particular, and of the whole of the Orders in general, is certainly very far from being so precise as to shew to what extent bills seeking discovery may be, in practice, discarded. It was quite clear to all those who attended the Court of Chancery on the days when claim business was disposed of, that the late Vice-Chancellor of England conceived the Orders to be limited in their operation to simple cases, if not, indeed, to purely administrative suits. It was equally clear that Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce entertained, and to a great extent acted upon, a very different opinion; and with that great difference of opinion subsisting between two experienced judges, it may well be permitted to draftsmen to doubt and hesitate. But, as one intention of the New Orders was, at any rate, to make Chancery proceedings shorter, and quicker, and more clear, the Orders ought not to remain in a state in which counsel cannot apply them to any but the commonest cases, without making experiments, which, even under the new system, must be still very expensive to their clients.

What is requisite is, that the New Orders should be carefully reviewed by persons of experience, with a view to complete them. They are at present a very good skeleton, but only a skeleton. Enough has been done under them to see to what they may be made applicable; and until they clearly define, not only what may be done under them, but how it is to be done, they will be but of very moderate use as engines of Chancery reform.

SURRENDER BY OPERATION OF LAW— DEMISE TO A STRANGER.

THE question whether a demise of land, which is in tenancy by the reversioner, to a stranger, with the consent of the lessee in possession, amounts to a surrender by operation of law, has been much discussed. (See Lyon v. Reed, 13 M. & W. 285; Nichols v. Atherstone, 10 Q. B. 944; 2 Smith's L. C. 459, 3rd ed.) But there is only one case in which the point appears to have actually arisen, and there it was decided that there was no surrender. (Lyon v. Reed, 13 M. & W. 285). There are, however, several authorities which were disapproved of in Lyon v. Reed, and which have been supposed to be inconsistent with that case. In Stone v. Whiting, (2 Stark. 235), Holroyd, J., was of opinion that it was a good defence to an action of assumpsit for rent, that the landlord had agreed to accept as his tenant a stranger, to whom the defendant had given up possession. And the same point was decided in Thomas v. Cooke, (2 Stark. 408; 2 B. & Al. 119), where, however, Bayley, J., appears to have also viewed the case in the light of an acceptance of the stranger by the lessor as assignee of the old term, which would put an end to the liability of the original lessee in assumpsit for use and occupation, without any surrender in fact or in law. But that view seems to be untenable, because there could be no assignment without writing, and the landlord's acceptance of the new tenant was no estoppel as between him and the old one. Thomas v. Cooke was followed in Bees v. Williams, (2 C. M. & R. 581); Walker v. Richardson, (2 M. & W. 882); and Nichols v. Atherstone, (10 Q. B. 944). In Walker v. Richardson the subject of the demise was the port of Stockton, and the tolls payable by vessels loading and unloading there; and it was held, in an action for tolls by the new lessee against a shipowner, that the production of the old lease from the lessor's custody, cancelled, and the plaintiff's enjoyment under the new lease, afforded an inference of assent by the old tenant to the new lease, from which a surrender in law might be presumed. In all these cases the tenant had not only agreed to the demise, but had also given up possession—a fact which completely distinguished them from the case now under consideration. (See Dodd v. Acklam, 7 Scott's N. R. 418; 6 Man. & G. 672; Cannan v. Hartley, 14 Jur., part 1, p. 577). In Lyon v. Reed (13 M. & W. 285) a lease had been granted by the Dean of St. Paul's to Ord and Planta, who were trustees for other persons. They underleased to the defendant, and afterwards assigned their reversion to Barber and Parry, who had been appointed trustees in their room. The cestui que trust having applied for a renewal of the lease, a new lease was granted to Ord and Planta, the assignment to the new trustees having been overlooked. A third lease was subsequently executed by the dean to a third set of trustees, with the concurrence of Barber and Parry, but not of Ord and Planta, and the defence to the action (which was for rent on the underlease) was, that, by reason of the outstanding term in Ord and Planta under the second lease, the dean was not seized of the immediate reversion within the meaning of the stat. 4 Geo. 2, c. 28, (which preserves the remedies on an underlease, notwithstanding a surrender of the lease reversion for the purpose of renewal). The plaintiff relied on the dean having possession of the second lease as evidence of the lessee's assent to the third lease; which assent, it was contended, amounted to a surrender in law of the second lease. But the Court of Exchequer, admitting the inference of assent, denied that it operated as a surrender in law. They said that a surrender by operation of law is, where the owner of a particular estate has been a party to some act, the validity of which he is by law afterwards estopped from disputing, and which would not be valid if his particular estate had continued to exist. In such cases, the Court added, there can be no question of intention. The surrender takes place independently, and even in spite of intention. But the mere assent of the tenant to a change of tenancy is an act which, like any other ordinary act in pais, is capable of being explained; and its effect must, therefore, depend, not on any legal consequence necessarily arising out of the act itself, but on the intention of the parties. The acts in pais which bind parties by way of estoppel are but few, and are pointed out by Lord Coke. (Co. Litt. 352. a.) They are all acts which anciently really were, and in contemplation of law have always continued to be, acts of notoriety not less formal and solemn than the execution of a deed; such as livery, entry, acceptance of an estate, and the like. But it would place titles in great peril if they were liable to be affected by such accidents as those alluded to in Thomas v. Cooke. A mortgage term might be surrendered by the mortgagee's assent to a lease by the mortgagor. For these reasons, and without being prepared to overrule the cases of Thomas v. Cooke, Walker v. Richardson, &c., the Court declined to follow them in the case of a reversion or incorporeal hereditament, of which there could be no open and notorious change of possession. In Nichols v. Atherstone the Court of Queen's Bench approved of the decision in Lyon v. Reed, but dissented from the criticism of the Court of Exchequer on the class of cases to which Thomas v. Cooke belongs, and founded their decision mainly on the fact, that in the case before them there had been an actual change of possession.

Lyon v. Reed, therefore, stands unimpeached as the only direct authority on the present question; and it is with great hesitation that we venture to question the soundness of that decision. The Court of Exchequer assumes, that a surrender in law is always the result of an estoppel, and never of intention; but it is remarkable that in no other case is estoppel relied on, and that in several cases of unquestionable authority it has been held, that, though there might be an estoppel, there was no surrender, because there could be no intention to surrender in the event which happened; and in other cases a surrender has been implied, though there was no estoppel. Thus it is now settled, that the acceptance of a lease, which, for want of estate or authority in the lessor, or for any other reason, cannot operate so fully as the parties intend, involves no surrender: Lloyd v. Gregory, (Sir W. Jones, 405), so decided, as Lord Mansfield explains, in Zouch v. Parsons, (3 Burr. 1807), because the cause, ground, and condition of the surrender had failed; Ros v. The Archbishop of York, (6 East, 86); Davidson v. Stanley, (4 Burr. 1945), where Lord Mansfield said, "Where the first lease could be of no use if he had the second, and both parties so intended, there is no inconsistency in the acceptance of a new good lease being a surrender of the former. But accepting a new void lease, which the lessee is not to enjoy, could not shew an intention to surrender the other." There the lessor had, in the interval between the first and the second lease, made a settlement of his reversion, under which he took back only a life estate; and the settlement was not known to the lessee. The case of Doe v. Poole (12 Jur., part 1, p. 451) shews still more conclusively that a surrender in law is not an estoppel, but, as the name imports, an implied surrender, just as a covenant in law is an implied covenant. In that case it was held, after an elaborate examination of the authorities, that the acceptance of a new lease, which, for want of compliance with the terms of a power, was good only for the lessor's life, operated as a conditional surrender only during the lessor's life; and the Court said, "The doctrine of surrenders implied by law was introduced for the purpose of giving effect to the intention of the parties. The surrender is presumed for the purpose of making a grant operative which would otherwise be without effect. (Thompson v. Trafford, Poph. 8, 9). The surrender is in consideration of the grant; and if the grant fails, contrary to the intention of the parties, it seems unreasonable that an absolute surrender should be presumed to have been intended." The decision must have been the reverse, if the ground of the doctrine were, as the Court of Exchequer represents it to be, that the lessee, by accepting the lease, is estopped from denying the lessor's title to make it. No doubt there is an estoppel in such cases until eviction; but if that were all, it would have been called "estoppel," and the expression "surrender in law" would never have been invented.

There may also be a surrender in law where there is no estoppel, as where the lessee for life or years accepts a grant of common or rent out of the demised land. (2 Roll. Ab. 496, l. 20). In Walker v. Richardson also, which was an action by the new lessee against a stranger, there could be no estoppel.

A surrender in law, then, is nothing more than a surrender implied from the tenant joining with the landlord in some transaction which does not purport to be in itself a surrender, but which cannot operate according to the intention without a previous surrender, actual or implied; and the exception of surrenders by operation of law, in the 3rd section of the Statute of Frauds, is an exception of implied surrenders. Therefore, where the tenant orally agrees that the tenancy shall cease and the landlord re-enter, this is an express surrender, and cannot operate for want of writing. (Mollett v. Brayne, 2 Camp. 103; Johnston v. Huddleston, 4 B. & Cr. 922). But if such an agreement is followed by delivery of possession to the landlord, the landlord's entry is thus explained to be a lawful entry in right of his old estate, which could not be without a prior surrender of the term; and such surrender is implied, not from the agreement, but from the entry explained by the agreement. (Grimman v. Legge, 4 B. & Cr. 324; Dodd v. Acklam, 7 Scott's N. R. 415). In Cannan v. Hartley, (14 Jur., part 1, p. 577), on the other hand, where the accompanying circumstances or declarations of the parties shew that the tenant licenses the landlord's entry for a special purpose, as to make a feoffment, (Dy. 33 b; 2 Roll. 496, l. 35), or where the landlord enters after the tenant has removed his goods to avoid a distress, (Bro. Ab., "Surrender," pl. 25), no surrender is implied. If the tenant gives up possession to the landlord's lessee, that is equivalent to giving up possession to the landlord himself, (Doe v. Harlow, 12 Ad. & El. 40), and implies a prior surrender; and the act from which the implication is raised may consist of words only, as where the tenant, without any change of possession, verbally agrees with the landlord for a new tenancy. The assent of the tenant to a new demise to a stranger seems to us to be an act of the same kind. It does not purport to be a surrender in itself, but it is a transaction which, as it cannot be effectual unless a surrender has been made, implies a surrender, and is within the exception in the Statute of Frauds.

But even if all surrenders in law depended on the doctrine of estoppel—and by a refined and somewhat enlarged application of that doctrine, taken with the rule in Doe d. Christmas v. Oliver, (10 B. & Cr. 181), that the estate, where it exists or where it accrues, feeds the estoppel, all the cases, including Walker v. Richardson, might perhaps be explained consistently with the general doctrine in Lyon v. Reed, though they were certainly decided on very different grounds—it seems to us that the result in this case would be the same. It is not true that the acts in pais, which bind parties by estoppel, are few, or that they are all acts which, in contemplation of law, are or ever were acts of notoriety. In the passage in 1st Inst., referred to in Lyon v. Reed, Lord Coke professes only to state a few instances by way of illustration; but among them is "acceptance of rent," which was never considered an act of notoriety. So it is settled by that extensive series of cases to which Pickard v. Sears (6 Ad. & El. 469) and Freeman v. Cooke (2 Exch. 654) belong, that a party is estopped by every averment or admission made by him, either by words or by conduct, which induces another person to alter his condition; and that is plainly done in the case under consideration.

We therefore venture to suggest, that the decision in Lyon v. Reed cannot be sustained; and we do not anticipate, from such an extension of the doctrine of Thomas v. Cooke as is there deprecated, any of the evil consequences which are suggested by the Court of Exchequer. Whether the doctrine be founded on implication or on estoppel, it is plain, both from principle and from the cases of a void lease, a license to make a feoffment, &c., that it can never operate against the intention of the parties, so far as they have consistent intentions; and where a mortgagee for years assents to a lease by the mortgagor, the intention is, not to represent to the lessee that the mortgagor alone can grant the lease, but to confirm the lessee's title by making him hold of the mortgagee.

G. S.

LIABILITY OF AN OCCUPIER OF LAND FOR THE ACTS OF PERSONS EMPLOYED BY HIM ON IT.

A SUBJECT which has repeatedly engaged the attention of our courts of law is that of the liability of the occupier for the acts of persons working on his premises, whose immediate master is under a contract to perform certain works for him.

The first case in which the point underwent much discussion was Bush v. Steinman, (1 B. & P. 404)—an action against the owner of a house who had employed a surveyor to do some work upon it. There were several such contracts, and one of the workmen of the person last employed put some lime on the road, in consequence of which the carriage of the plaintiff was overturned, and it was held that the defendant was liable, though the person who occasioned the injury was not his own immediate servant. Eyre, C. J., however, was at first inclined to think that the action would not lie; and afterwards, in the course of his judgment, although he had then come to a different conclusion, he said, "I am ready to confess that I find great difficulty in stating with accuracy the grounds on which it is to be supported. The relation between master and servant, as commonly exemplified in actions brought against the master, is not sufficient; and the general proposition, that a person shall be answerable for any injury which arises in carrying into execution that which he has employed another to do, seems too large and loose." Where, then, is the line to be drawn? That the difficulty lies here is manifest, from the above passage being often quoted by succeeding judges. Littledale, J., in his very able judgment in Laugher v. Pointer, (5 B. & Cr. 547), endeavoured to solve the difficulty by pointing out the distinction between injuries arising from the negligent conduct or management of works relating to real property and those relating to personal property. "The injuries done upon land or buildings are in the nature of nuisances, for which the occupier ought to be chargeable when occasioned by any acts of persons whom he brings upon the premises. The use of the premises is confined by the law to himself, and he should take care not to bring persons there who do any mischief to others." But with regard to moveable property it is otherwise, and he proceeded to explain why the owner should not be necessarily liable for the negligent management of such property. And this law was expressly recognised and approved in Quarman v. Burnett, (6 M. & W. 499).

In these last two cases the injury arose from the negligent management of moveable property, and it was not necessary for the decision of either of them to lay down positively that the owner of fixed property should always, or even where the wrongful act was "in the nature of a nuisance," be liable for the negligent conduct or management of such property. All that was attempted to be done was to enunciate such general principles as might apply to the questions then before the Court, and not be inconsistent with the previously decided cases of Bush v. Steinman, (1 B. & P. 404); Littledale v. Lord Lonsdale, (2 H. Bl. 267, 299); and Sly v. Edgeley, (6 Esp. 6).

But an opinion seems to have sprung up, and was certainly more prevalent than true, that in all cases where the injury was connected with real property, the owner of it should be liable, whether the act which was the cause of such injury amounted to a nuisance or not, although it would be otherwise in the case of moveable property.

In Reedie v. The North-western Railway Company (13 Jur. 659), the bare point was put to the Court of Exchequer—was there, in fact, any distinction as to the law in cases of fixed and of moveable property? It was an action brought against the defendants, under the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 93, by the personal representative of a person killed by the fall of a large block of stone. The accident was caused by the negligence of some of the workmen of the contractor who had been employed by the defendants to construct a viaduct for them, and the workmen, at the time of the accident, were engaged in removing the stone from a travelling truck; and Rolfe, B., in giving the judgment of the Court, said—"On full consideration we have come to the conclusion that there is no such distinction, unless, perhaps, in cases where the act complained of is such as to amount to a nuisance."

So that it is still an open question whether the owner, or rather occupier, of real property is to be liable for the acts of the workmen of his contractors, when those acts are such as to amount to a nuisance. And in the conflict of law on this point, may not another consideration be introduced as a material element in the question? The injury in the last-mentioned case, it will be perceived, arose from the personal negligence or carelessness of the workmen, and the act that caused it was not such as to amount to a nuisance, nor was it any evidence of the want of skill or care on the part of the contractor, who had been "brought on the premises" by the defendants, selected by them on account of their belief in his competency for the work. Nothing, therefore, could have been more unjust than to have held the defendants answerable for the mere carelessness of persons whom they had no hand in selecting, and whose qualifications for the task assigned to them they never vouched or knew anything of. And in the case put by Platt, B., (in the argument of Reedie v. The North-western Railway Company), of a clumsy workman carrying up a hod of bricks and carelessly letting them fall upon a passenger in the street, we have another instance of an injury arising from the personal negligence of a workman; and surely one could no more successfully contend for the liability of the occupier of the house in such a case, than for the railway company's liability in the principal case. Now, what difference in principle would there be, if the clumsy workman were to let fall such a number of bricks upon the pavement beneath him (supposing the hod capable of containing a sufficient quantity) as to amount to a nuisance, and a short-sighted person were to stumble over them and break his leg? This carelessness or negligence here spoken of is distinguishable from that where a piece of machinery or other work has been badly or improperly constructed; for although in both cases the injury may arise from the negligence of the workmen, yet, in the present case, it is the workman's negligence only, not adopted or ratified by his master at all; whereas, in the latter case, it is the duty of the workman's immediate master, and before making use of any such machinery or other work it is the principal's duty also, (that is, the person for whom the work was being done), to see that it has been properly constructed; and each of them are supposed, in their several ways, to have adopted the acts and approved the work of those employed upon it, and the principal is, therefore, liable for any injury arising from the use of it.

If, then, that distinction as to the law between fixed and moveable property is to hold good in cases where the act complained of amounts to a nuisance, might it not become important to consider whether the act was or was not simply a piece of negligence on the part of the workman, unadopted and unapproved by anybody?

It should be observed, however, that the mere ratification or adoption of the workman's work by the contractor, although evidence of want of skill or care on his part, will not, at least in ordinary cases not amounting to a nuisance, render the principal liable, if the contractor or middleman carry on a definite business, recognised by the law as an independent calling. (Allen

v. Hayward, 7 Q. B. 975). And it may reasonably be doubted whether, if the act did amount to a nuisance, that would make any difference. See the case of Burgess v. Gray, (1 C. B. 578), where the defendant had personally interfered and adopted the wrongful act, and was therefore held liable; but no stress was laid, in arguing that case, on the fact that the act which occasioned the injury amounted to a nuisance.

The chief points, therefore, to which attention will have to be directed, when any such question as that we have been discussing comes to be decided, are—Does the contractor or middleman carry on a definite business, recognised by the law as an independent and distinct calling? Did the act which occasioned the injury amount to a nuisance? And has the principal personally interfered, or otherwise, either actually or constructively, adopted the acts from which the injury complained of arose? When answers to these three questions shall have been returned, it will be easy to decide as to the liability or non-liability of the defendant: one case excepted—the case left open by the recent judgment of the Court of Exchequer: i. e. when the first and second questions are answered in the affirmative, and the last not answered at all, or answered in the negative; but in such case, we submit, there is little doubt that the last question, being answered in the negative, will negative the principal's liability.

Church, John Thomas, Esq.	Mourilyan, Joseph Noakes, Esq.
Donne, Samuel Edward, Esq.	Murray, William, Esq.
Fonblanque, John S. M., Esq.	Symons, Jellinger Cookson, Esq.
Jones, William, Esq.	Torr, John Smale, Esq.
Maynard, Jonas Alleyne, Esq.	Withall, William, Esq.
Morris, John Michael, Esq.	Wordsworth, Charles, Esq.

This Society presents the following advantages to the Assured:—

First.—The security of a large subscribed Capital.
Second.—Exemption of the Assured from all liability.
Third.—Tables of Premiums calculated on the true law of mortality, expressly for this Office, and affording particular advantages to young lives.

Fourth.—Participating and Non-participating Scales of Premiums. In the former the Assured are entitled to EIGHTY PER CENT. or FORTY-FIFTHS of the profits periodically, (without deduction for interest on capital or guarantee fund), either by way of addition to the sum assured, or in diminution of Premium, at the option of the Assured.

Fifth.—Policies INDISPUTABLE, except in case of fraud.

Sixth.—This Society gives a much larger share of profits to the Assured, and at a lower rate of Premium, than the great majority of other Life Offices.

Seventh.—Parties wishing to assure their lives without participating in the profits can do so on a lower scale of Premiums than that of a large proportion of other Offices.

Assurances may be effected through any respectable Solicitor, or by application to

CHARLES JOHN GILL, Secretary.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 21, 1850.

THE amendment of the law forms the subject of a long letter recently published by Lord Brougham, and addressed to Lord Denman. The matters discussed are important in themselves, though in some respects unconnected; and his Lordship's treatment of them, his brilliant though discursive style, will not fail to recommend them to public attention. After complaining of the frequent opposition with which his own projects have been met, he proceeds to review the legislation of 1850, so far as it relates to law reform.

The history of County Court bills, including the last, is considered to be instructive, as shewing the caprice, uncertainty, and ignorance of our legislators, and as proving the necessity of appointing a Minister of Justice, whose province it should be to mature all plans for amending the law, as well as to superintend those who are engaged in administering it. And speaking of the conflict between the two Houses upon the County Court Extension Bill, he adds—"It passed, however, with some defects, which would have been avoided, as would have been the unseemly spectacle of the blunders and ignorance, the jars and conflicts, which I have described, had a department existed in this as in other countries, where it is far less wanted—a department charged with the superintendence of our jurisprudence." The powers with which this Minister of Justice should be invested are not defined with any certainty, nor is it clear that such an officer could have prevented a conflict between the House of Lords and the House of Commons upon such substantial questions as a concurrent and appellate jurisdiction connected with the county courts; but it is evident that some efficient superintendence is required in the preparation of Parliamentary bills, in all relating to their form and phraseology, and to their effect upon prior statutes. We gather from different portions of the letter, that if the proposed separation of the Chancellor's duties takes place, the Lord Keeper would (in Lord Brougham's opinion) be the proper person to exercise the functions of a Minister of Justice.

The next measure of the last session which meets with his Lordship's approbation is Mr. Turner's Chancery bill, "by which an easy, speedy, and cheap method is provided of obtaining the Court's opinion on points in dispute where the facts are admitted." But much remains to be done. "We have amended the bankrupt laws; the proceedings in equity remain to be reformed. We have made provisions, useful, though paltry enough, to abridge the style of our statutes: we have done nothing to secure general superintendence of their structure and composition. We have created an excellent appellate jurisdiction for our plantations: we have yet somewhat to improve in the Court of Review for the mother country. We have mitigated the severity of the criminal code: we have given no security to the public that offenders shall be brought to justice. We have digested the law of debtor and creditor: the law generally, and above all the criminal law, remains undigested, both common and statute." Lord Brougham recommends the application of the Winding-up Acts to the administration of the estates of deceased persons; the appointment of a public prosecutor; and the enactment of a criminal code. He states that seventeen years have elapsed since the issuing of the Criminal Law Commission for the preparation of such a code, and that nearly 100,000*l.* have been expended upon the work. He then considers the appellate jurisdiction of the House of Lords, and opinion that it should be left as it is; divorce bills he would have still passed by the House of Lords, but with the aid of the Judicial Committee's report on the evidence. "Certainly at present," he adds, "nothing can be more unsatisfactory than the practice of these divorce bills, which confine the remedy entirely to the rich." The proposition for dividing the office of Lord Chancellor is "liable to serious objections." He is opposed to the present system of appointing Crown lawyers to the first vacancies which happen on the Bench, and repeats that, in the words of Lord Coke, "the cushion of the Common Pleas is the pillow on which Mr. Attorney doth lay his head." The report of the Committee upon Judicial Salaries is then dissected; exception is taken to the evidence upon which it is based, and its conclusions are denied.

An eloquent peroration concludes the letter which we have thus briefly analysed, and we are happy to learn from it that his Lordship, though discouraged, does not yet despair of the cause of law reform.

[31st May, 1850.]

Whereas by an act of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, [c. 42.] and an act of the 1 & 2 Vict. [c. 106.] powers were given to the judges of the superior courts of common law at Westminster to make (within periods which have expired) alterations in the forms of pleading: and whereas it is desirable that powers should be given to the said judges, within such time and under such limitations as hereinafter expressed, to make such further alterations in pleadings as they may deem expedient, and such other alter-tions as hereinafter mentioned: be it therefore enacted &c., that the judges of the said superior courts, or any eight or more of them, of whom the chiefs of each of the said courts shall be three, shall and may, by any rule or order to be from time to time by them made in term or vacation, at any time within five years after the passing of this act, make such alterations in the mode of pleading in the said courts, and in the mode of entering and transcribing pleadings, judgments, and other proceedings in actions at law, and in the time and manner of objecting to errors in pleadings and other proceedings, and in the mode of verifying pleas and obtaining final judgment without trial in certain cases, and such regulations as to the payment of costs, and otherwise for carrying into effect the said alterations, as to them may seem expedient; and all such rules, orders, or regulations shall be laid before both houses of Parliament, if Parliament be then sitting, immediately upon the making of the same, or if Parliament be not sitting, then within five days after the next meeting thereof; and no such rule, order, or regulation shall have effect until three months after the same shall have been so laid before both houses of Parliament; and any rule, order, or regulation so made shall, from and after such time aforesaid, be binding and obligatory on the said courts and all other courts of common law, and on all courts of error into which the judgments of the said courts or any of them shall be carried by any writ of error, and be of the like force and effect as if the provisions contained therein had been expressly enacted by Parliament: provided always, that it shall be lawful for the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by any proclamation inserted in the London Gazette, or for either of the houses of Parliament by any resolution passed at any time within three months next after such rules, orders, and regulations shall have been laid before Parliament, to suspend the whole or any part of such rules, orders, or regulations, and in such case the whole, or such part thereof as shall be so suspended, shall not be binding and obligatory on the said courts, or on any other court of common law or court of error.

CAP. XVII.

An Act to amend an Act of the last Session of Parliament for granting Relief against Defects in Leases made under Powers of Leasing. [31st May, 1850.]

Sect. 1. 12 & 13 Vict. c. 26, s. 3, repealed.

2. Where there is a Note in Writing showing Intent to confirm, Acceptance of Rent to be deemed a Confirmation.

3. Where Reversioner is able and willing to confirm, Lessee to accept Confirmation.

4. Act may be amended &c.

Whereas by an act passed in the last session of Parliament, "for granting Relief against Defects in Leases made under Powers of Leasing in certain Cases;" and by another act of the same session the operation of the said first-recited act was suspended until the 1st June, 1850: and whereas it is expedient that the said first-recited act should be amended: be it therefore enacted &c., that so much of the said first-recited act as enacts that the acceptance of rent under any such invalid lease as therein mentioned shall, as against the person accepting the same, be deemed a confirmation of such lease, shall be repealed.

2. That where, upon or before the acceptance of rent under any such invalid lease, as in the said first-recited act mentioned, any receipt, memorandum, or note in writing, confirming such lease, is signed by the person accepting such rent, or some other person by him thereunto lawfully authorised, such acceptance shall, as against the person so accepting such rent, be deemed a confirmation of such lease.

3. That where during the continuance of the possession taken under any such invalid lease, as in the said first-recited act mentioned, the person for the time being entitled (subject to such possession as aforesaid) to the hereditaments comprised in such lease, or to the possession or the receipt of the rents and profits thereof, is able to confirm such lease without variation, the lessee, his heirs, executors, or administrators, (as the case may require), or any person who would have been bound by the lease if the same had been valid, shall, upon the request of the person so able to confirm the same, be bound to accept confirmation accordingly; and such confirmation may be by memorandum or note in writing, signed by the persons confirming and accepting respectively, or by some other persons by them respectively lawfully authorised; and after confirmation and acceptance of confirmation such lease shall be valid, and shall be deemed to have had from the granting thereof the same effect as if the same had been originally valid.

4. That this act may be amended or repealed by any act to be passed in this session of Parliament.

CAP. XXI.

An Act for shortening the Language used in Acts of Parliament. [10th June, 1850.]

- Sect. 1. Acts of Parliament may be altered, &c. in the same Session.
2. Acts of Parliament to be divided into Sections, without introductory Words.
3. Where any Act is referred to it shall be sufficient to cite the Year of the Reign, Chapter, and Section, &c.
4. Interpretation of certain Words for future Acts.
5. Repealed Acts not to be revived in Virtue of the Repeal of the repealing Act.
6. Repealed Provisions of any Act to remain in Force until the substituted Provisions come into Force.
7. Acts to be deemed Public Acts.
8. Commencement of Act.

Be it declared and enacted &c., that every act to be passed after the commencement of this act may be altered, amended, or repealed in the same session of Parliament, any law or usage to the contrary notwithstanding.

2. That all acts shall be divided into sections, if there be more enactments than one, which sections shall be deemed to be substantive enactments, without any introductory words.

3. That in any act, when any former act is referred to, it shall be sufficient, if such act was made before the seventh year of Henry VII, to cite the year of the King's reign in which it was made, and where there are more statutes than one in the same year the statute, and where there are more chapters than one the chapter; and if such act referred to was made after the fourth year of Henry VII, to cite the year of the reign, and where there are more statutes or sessions than one in the same year the statute or the session, (as the case may require), and where there are more chapters or sections than one the chapter or section or chapter and section, (as the case may require), without reciting the title of such act, or the provision of such section, so referred to; and the references in all cases shall be made according to the copies of statutes printed by the Queen's printer, or to the copies thereof contained in the reports of the Commissioners of Public Records: provided that where it is only intended to amend or repeal any portion only of such section it shall be necessary still either to recite such portion or to set forth the matter or thing intended to be amended or repealed.

4. That in all acts words importing the masculine gender shall be deemed and taken to include females, and the singular to include the plural, and the plural the singular, unless the contrary as to gender or number is expressly provided; and the word "month" to mean calendar month, unless words be added shewing lunar month to be intended; and "county" shall be held to mean also county of a town or of a city, unless such extended meaning is expressly excluded by words; and the word "land" shall include messuages, tenements, and hereditaments, houses and buildings, of any tenure, unless where there are words to exclude houses and buildings, or to restrict the meaning to tenements of some particular tenure; and the words "oath," "swear," and "affidavit" shall include affirmation, declaration, affirming, and declaring, in the case of persons by law allowed to declare or affirm instead of swearing.

5. That where any act repealing in whole or in part any former act is itself repealed, such last repeal shall not revive the act or provisions before repealed, unless words be added reviving such act or provisions.

6. That wherever any act shall be made repealing in whole or in part any former act, and substituting some provision or provisions instead of the provision or provisions repealed, such provision or provisions so repealed shall remain in force until the substituted provision or provisions shall come into operation by force of the last-made act.

7. That every act made after the commencement of this act shall be deemed and taken to be a public act, and shall be judicially taken notice of as such, unless the contrary be expressly provided and declared by such act.

8. That this act shall commence and take effect from and immediately after the commencement of the next session of Parliament.

Jones, William, Esq.	Torr, John Smale, Esq.
Maynard, Jonas Alleyne, Esq.	Withall, William, Esq.
Morris, John Michael, Esq.	Wordsworth, Charles, Esq.

This Society presents the following advantages to the Assured:—

First.—The security of a large subscribed Capital.

Second.—Exemption of the Assured from all liability.

Third.—Tables of Premiums calculated on the true law of mortality, expressly for this Office, and affording particular advantages to young lives.

Fourth.—Participating and Non-participating Scales of Premiums. In the former the Assured are entitled to EIGHTY PER CENT. or FOUR-FIFTHS of the profits periodically, (without deduction for interest on capital or guarantee fund), either by way of addition to the sum assured, or in diminution of Premium, at the option of the Assured.

Fifth.—Policies INDISPUTABLE, except in case of fraud.

Sixth.—This Society gives a much larger share of profits to the Assured, and at a lower rate of Premium, than the great majority of other Life Offices.

Seventh.—Parties wishing to assure their lives without participating in the profits can do so on a lower scale of Premiums than that of a large proportion of other Offices.

Assurances may be effected through any respectable Solicitor, or by application to

CHARLES JOHN GILL, Secretary.

. Dissolved Lives assured at adequate Premiums.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 28, 1850.

WE have some reason to believe that the full extent of the doctrine of the inalienability of a married woman's reversionary choses in action, however well known in the chambers of conveyancers, is not as generally understood as it is desirable that it should be; for although few deeds are now to be met with attempting simply the alienation of a married woman's reversionary interest in a principal sum, expectant on the decease of another person, it is not equally uncommon to find deeds purporting to assign all a married woman's equitable life interest in personalty, to or for the benefit of her husband. We shall not, therefore, be wasting the time of many of our readers, if we shortly refer to the authorities on this subject.

The cases in which the inalienability of a married woman's equitable reversionary interest in a principal fund, expectant on the decease of another person, (Purdew v. Jackson, 1 Russ. 1, and Honner v. Morton, 3 Russ. 65), was established, are too well known to require more than a mere reference to them; and since those cases, one scarcely ever (as we have observed) meets with the mistake of an assignment by husband and wife, of the wife's reversionary interest of that nature.

Since those cases, however, many, and some very elaborately contrived, attempts have been made to elude their doctrine, and by means of a supposed merger, or by other mystifications, so to deal with a married woman's reversionary interest, as to enable her effectually to deprive herself of it.

The first of these was Story v. Tonge, (7 Beav. 91), which was followed by various others, ending with Hall v. Hugonin, (14 Sim. 595), in which the late Vol. XIV. L L

Vice-Chancellor of England held, that by the contrivance of a surrender of the life interest to the married woman entitled to the reversion, she was enabled effectually to bar her right of survivorship. The doctrine of this case was, however, overruled by the still more recent decision of Lord Cottenham in Whittle v. Henning, (2 Ph. 731), which has, we conceive, finally settled, that no contrivance whatever will suffice to enable a married woman to bar her reversionary interest in personal estate.

The interest of the married woman was not, however, in Whittle v. Henning, a reversionary interest in the corpus of the fund, but a life interest therein, expectant on the decease of her husband. That case therefore, not only decided the point discussed in Hall v. Hugonin, but confirmed the decision on the point first raised in Stiffe v. Everett, (1 My. & C. 37), viz. that the estate which a married woman has in an annuity, or life interest in a personal fund, is reversionary as to so much as may accrue after the death of her husband, and is, as to such interest surviving to the wife if she outlives him, as much inalienable as a reversionary interest in the principal, expectant on the determination of a life estate. That the doctrine of the inalienability of a married woman's reversionary interest was not, before Stiffe v. Everett was decided, generally understood to be applicable to a life interest, may be collected from the circumstance, that in that case the argument turned entirely on another question, viz. whether the married woman in that case was or was not subjected to the fetters of a restraint upon anticipation; and the question whether, assuming her not to be so fettered, she could bar her right by survivorship, was left to be suggested by the Court, although the case was argued by counsel of eminence on both sides. The doctrine, however, of Stiffe v. Everett was referred to, and expressly recognised and acted upon, in Whittle v. Henning; and it must now be considered fully settled, that the life interest of a married woman in personalty cannot, either by a simple assignment by her husband and herself, or by any other contrivance, be alienated, as to so much as may subsist of it, if she survives her husband.

34. Interpretation of Terms.
35. Commencement of Act.
36. Act may be amended &c.

Whereas proceedings in the High Court of Chancery in England are attended with great delay and expense, which it is expedient to diminish: be it therefore enacted, &c., that it shall be lawful for persons interested or claiming to be interested in any question cognisable in the said court as to the construction of any act of Parliament, will, deed, or other instrument in writing, or any article, clause, matter, or thing therein contained, or as to the title or evidence of title to any real or personal estate contracted to be sold or otherwise dealt with, or as to the parties to or the form of any deed or instrument for carrying any such contract into effect, or as to any other matter falling within the original jurisdiction of the said Court as a Court of equity, or made subject to the jurisdiction or authority of the said Court by any statute not being one of the statutes relating to bankrupts, and including among such persons all lunatics, married women, and infants, in the manner and under the restrictions hereinafter contained, to come in stating such question in the form of a special case for the opinion of the said Court, and it shall also be lawful for all executors, administrators, and trustees to concur in such case.

2. That the committee of the estate of any lunatic interested or claiming to be interested in any such question as aforesaid may, after having been authorised in that behalf by the Lord Chancellor, concur in such case in his own name and on the behalf of the lunatic.

3. That a husband interested or claiming to be interested in right of his wife in any such question as aforesaid may concur in such case in his own name and in the name of his wife when the wife has no claim to any interest distinct from her husband, and that a married woman having or claiming any interest in any such question as aforesaid distinct from her husband may in her own right concur in such case, provided that her husband also concurs therein.

4. That the guardian of any infant interested or claiming to be interested in any such question as aforesaid may concur in such case in the name and on the behalf of the infant, unless such guardian has an interest in such question adverse to the interest of the infant therein.

5. That it shall be lawful for the said Court, by order to be made in the matter of any lunatic not found such by inquisition, or, in the matter of any infant, upon the application of any person on the behalf of such lunatic, or upon the application of such infant, by motion or petition, to appoint any person shewn by affidavit to be a fit person, and to have no interest adverse to the interest of the lunatic or infant, to be the special guardian of such lunatic or infant for the purpose of concurring in such case in the name and on behalf of the lunatic or infant, and any such person so appointed may lawfully so concur: provided always, that it shall be lawful for the said Court to require notice of such application to be given to such person, if any, as the Court shall think fit.

6. That in any case in which any such order as aforesaid shall have been made by the said Court in the matter of any infant without notice to the guardian of the infant, it shall be lawful for the said Court, if it shall think fit so to do, to discharge such order, upon the application of such guardian, by motion or petition; and the said Court, if it shall think fit, may thereupon appoint some other fit person to be the special guardian of such infant for the purpose of such special case, and may also give such directions as may be necessary for substituting in such special case either the name of the guardian so applying, or of the special guardian so appointed in lieu of the name of the special guardian so displaced: provided always, that the discharge of any order appointing a special guardian shall not invalidate anything which shall in the meantime have been done by such special guardian, unless the Court shall, upon notice to all parties, specially so direct.

7. That every such special case shall be entitled as a cause between some or one of the parties interested or claiming to be interested as plaintiffs or plaintiff, and the others or other of them as defendants or defendant; and that in the title to such cases lunatics and infants shall be described as such, and their committees, guardians, or special guardians named; and that where in any such case a married woman is named as a plaintiff and her husband as a defendant thereto, a next friend of such married woman shall be named in the title to such case.

8. That every such special case shall concisely state such facts and documents as may be necessary to enable the Court to decide the question raised thereby; and that upon the hearing of such case the Court and the parties shall be at liberty to refer to the whole contents of such documents; and the Court shall be at liberty to draw from the facts and documents stated in any such special case any inference which the Court might have drawn therefrom if proved in a cause.

9. That every such special case to which an infant or lunatic is a party by his guardian or special guardian shall also state how such guardian or special guardian was constituted; and that where any married woman having or claiming any interest distinct from her husband is a party to such case, it shall be stated therein that she concurs in such case in her own right.

10. That every such special case shall be signed by counsel for all parties, and shall be filed in the same manner as bills are filed, and that the defendants may appear thereto in the same manner as defendants appear to bills; and that no defendant shall be required to take an office copy of a special case, but an office copy thereof shall be taken by the plaintiff.

11. That after a special case shall have been filed, and the defendants shall have appeared thereto, all the parties to such special case shall be subject to the jurisdiction of the Court in the same manner as if the plaintiff in the special case had filed a bill against the parties named as defendants thereto, and such defendants had appeared to such bill; and upon the special case being filed, and appearances entered thereto as aforesaid, all parties to such special case, other than married women, infants, and lunatics, shall, for the purposes of such special case, be bound by the statements therein; and that married women, infants, and lunatics made parties to a special case shall, for the purposes of such special case, be bound by the statements therein, when, and not before, leave shall have been given by the Court to set down such special case in manner hereinafter provided.

12. That so soon as all the defendants shall have appeared to the special case the same may, subject to the provisions hereinafter contained, be set down for hearing, and subpoenas to hear judgment issued and served according to the practice of the said Court.

13. That when any married woman, infant, or lunatic is party to a special case, application may be made to the Court by motion for leave to set down the same; of which motion notice shall be given to every party to such case in whom, as executor, administrator, or trustee, any property in question therein is or is alleged to be vested in trust for or for the benefit of such married woman, infant, or lunatic, and also, if such application be not made by or on behalf of such married woman, infant, or lunatic, to such married woman and her husband, or to such infant, or to such lunatic and his committee, if any, as the case may be; and that upon the hearing of such motion the said Court may give leave to set down such case, if it shall be of opinion that it is proper that the question raised therein shall be determined thereon, and shall be satisfied by affidavit or other sufficient evidence that the statements contained therein, so far as the same affect the interest of such married woman, infant, or lunatic, are true, but otherwise may refuse such application: provided always, that in case the said Court, upon the hearing of such application, shall be of opinion that it is proper that the question raised in such case shall be determined thereon, but shall not be satisfied that the statements contained therein, so far as they affect the interest of such married woman, infant, or lunatic, are true, it shall be lawful for the said Court to refer it to one of the Masters hereof to make such inquiries as to the Court shall seem proper, and upon further application being made, by motion as aforesaid, upon the said Master's report, to give or refuse leave to set down such case as to the said Court shall seem fit.

14. That it shall be lawful for the said Court, upon the hearing of any such special case as aforesaid, to determine the questions raised therein or any of them, and by decree to declare its opinion thereon, and, so far as the case shall admit of the same, upon the right involved therein, without proceeding to administer any relief consequent upon such declaration; and that every such declaration of the said Court contained in any such decree shall have the same force and effect as such declaration would have had, and shall be binding to the same extent as such declaration would have been, if contained in a decree made in a suit between the same parties instituted by bill: provided always, that it shall be lawful for the said Court, if it shall see fit so to do, before proceeding to make such decree as aforesaid, to send any case or cases for the opinion of any of her Majesty's Courts of common law, reserving the consideration of all further directions and of the costs, and to make such decree as aforesaid upon such further directions; provided also, that if upon the hearing of such special case as aforesaid the Court shall be of opinion that the questions raised thereby or any of them cannot properly be decided upon such case, the said Court may refuse to decide the same.

15. That every executor, administrator, trustee, or other person making any payment or doing any act in conformity with the declaration contained in any decree made upon a special case shall in all respects be as fully and effectually protected and indemnified by such declaration as if such payment had been made or act done under or in pursuance of the express order of the said Court made in a suit between the same parties instituted by bill, save only as to any rights or claims of any person in respect of matters not determined by such declaration.

16. That where any person shall be desirous to have a special case reheard, or to appeal from the decision thereon, it shall be lawful for the said Court, upon application for that purpose, either at the time of the decree upon such special case being made or at any time afterwards, and upon such conditions, if any, as the Court shall think fit, to order that the declaration contained in such decree shall not be acted upon for such time as the said Court shall think just.

17. That the filing of a special case, and the entering of appearances thereto by the persons named as defendants therein, shall be taken to be a lis pendens, and may be registered under the provisions of an act made and passed in the second year of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act for the better Protection of Purchasers against Judgments, Crown Debts, Lis pendens, and Flats in Bankruptcy," in like manner as any other lis pendens in a court of equity may now be so registered, and, unless and until so registered shall not bind a purchaser or mortgagee without express notice thereof.

18. That any documents referred to in a special case, and any copies thereof or extracts therefrom, identified by the signature of the solicitors for all parties or of the London agents of such solicitors, may be produced and read at the hearing of such case, without further proof; and that it shall be lawful for the said Court, at any time after the filing of the special case, and the entering of appearances thereto by the persons named as defendants therein, to order any document which may be admitted thereby to be in the possession of any party to such case to be deposited and produced in such manner and for such purposes as the Court shall think fit.

19. And whereas it is expedient to provide means for enabling executors or administrators of deceased persons to ascertain whether there are any outstanding debts or liabilities affecting the personal estates of such persons, without the delay and expense of suits to administer such estates: be it therefore enacted, that it shall be lawful for the said Court, upon the application of the executors or administrators of any deceased person, by order to be made upon motion or petition of course, and to be in the form or to the effect set forth in the schedule hereto, with such variations as circumstances may require, to refer it to one of the Masters of the said Court to take an account of the debts and liabilities affecting the personal estate of such deceased person, and to report thereon: provided always, that no such order shall be made until the expiration of one year next after the death of such deceased person, or pending any proceedings to administer the estate of such person, and that in case at any time after the making of such order any decree or order for administering the estate of such deceased person shall be made, it shall be lawful for the said Court by such decree or order to stay or suspend the proceedings under such order of course, on such terms and conditions, if any, as to the said Court shall seem just.

20. That it shall be lawful for any person who may have come in before the Master under any such order, and claimed to be a creditor upon the estate of the deceased person, or to have any demand upon such estate by reason of any liability, and whose debt or claim may not have been wholly allowed by the said Master, to apply to the said Court by motion, of which notice shall be given within fourteen days after the filing of the Master's report, to have such claim allowed by the Court, either wholly or partially; and it shall be lawful for the said executors or administrators, and for any creditor of the deceased person who may be authorised by special leave of the said Court so to do, to apply to the said Court by motion, of which notice shall be given within the time aforesaid, to have any debt or claim allowed by the said Master disallowed by the Court, either wholly or partially; and at the expiration of fourteen days after the filing of the said report the same shall, except as to any debt or claim as to which any such notice as aforesaid may have been given, be absolute, as if the same had been confirmed by order of the Court.

21. That upon the hearing of any such motion as aforesaid the said Court may either dismiss such motion, or may order the debt or claim to which such motion relates to be allowed or disallowed, as the case may be, and either wholly or partially, or may direct further inquiry or further proceedings, by way of action or otherwise, touching such debt or claim, and after such inquiry or proceedings may, upon further motion, deal with such debt or claim as to the said Court shall seem just: provided always, that no new evidence shall be received by the said Court upon the hearing of any such motion without special leave of the said Court.

22. That in case any debt or any certain liability shall have been allowed as aforesaid, and shall not within fourteen days after the report has become absolute as to such debt or liability, or after the same shall have been allowed by the said Court, be paid or provided for by appropriation to the satisfaction of the person who has established such liability, it shall be lawful for the said Court, by order, to be made, in case of any debt remaining due, upon the application by motion or petition of the person to whom the debt remains due, and on notice to the executors or administrators, and in case of any certain liability remaining unprovided for by appropriation, upon the application by motion or petition of the person by whom such liability has been established, or of the executors or administrators, and on notice by the party applying to the other of them, to order payment of the debts which may have been allowed and remain unpaid, and to provide for the certain liabilities which may have been allowed and remain unprovided for, in like manner as the same could or might have been paid or provided for in a suit for that purpose instituted by bill, or to refer it to the Master to take an account of the debts and certain liabilities allowed as aforesaid which remain unpaid or unprovided for, and also the usual accounts of the personal estate of the deceased person, with all usual and proper directions; and every such order shall have the same force and effect and shall be prosecuted and carried on in like manner as a decree in a creditor's suit instituted by bill.

23. That in case any contingent liability shall be allowed by the said report or by the said Court, it shall be lawful for the said Court, by order, to be made upon the application of the executors or administrators, by motion or petition, on notice to the person who may have established such contingent liability, to order such sum of money, part of the estate of the deceased person, as to the said Court shall seem just, to be set apart and appropriated for answering such contingent liability, and to give such directions as the said Court shall think fit touching the payment of such sum of money into court, and the investment thereof, and the payment, application, or accumulation of the interest or dividends thereof in the meantime and until the same shall be required to answer such liability, and, when such liability shall be ascertained or determined, to give such directions as to the payment of such sum out of court as the said Court shall deem right: provided always, that no order to be made as aforesaid shall in any manner bind the assets so appropriated as against the persons entitled to the estate of the deceased subject to the contingent liability; and any person interested in such appropriated assets may apply to the Court touching the same as he may be advised.

24. That after the filing of such report as aforesaid it shall be lawful for the said Court, upon the application of the executors or administrators of the deceased, by order, to be made on motion, to restrain by injunction any proceedings at law against them by any person having or claiming to have any demand upon the estate of the deceased by reason of any debt or liability, other than the persons who may have established contingent liabilities under the said order for which no appropriation may have been made.

25. That in case no debt or liability, or no debt or liability other than a contingent liability, shall have been allowed as aforesaid, or in case any debt or liability other than as aforesaid shall have been allowed as aforesaid, then after the same shall have been paid or provided for by appropriation as aforesaid, all payments made by the executors or administrators, or any of them, on account of the estate of the deceased person, and all dispositions of such assets made by them or any of them on account of such estate, shall, as against all persons having or claiming to have any demand upon such estate by reason of any debt or liability, other than persons who may have established under the said order any contingent liability for which no such appropriation as aforesaid may have been made, be as good and effectual as if the same had been made under a decree of the said Court: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall in any manner affect or prejudice the rights of any creditor or other person having any demand or claim upon the estate of the deceased against any assets so paid or disposed of, or against the persons to whom such payment or disposition may have been made, or against any assets appropriated under the provisions of this act, and the appropriation of which, if made under a decree of the said Court in a suit to which he was not a party, would not have been binding upon him.

26. And whereas by an act passed in the 3 & 4 Will. 4, [c. 94,] intituled "An Act for the Regulation of the Proceedings and Practice of certain Offices of the High Court of Chancery in England," it is enacted, "That the Masters in Ordinary of the High Court of Chancery shall hear and determine all applications for time to plead, answer, or demur, and for leave to amend bills, and for enlarging publication, and all such other matters relating to the conduct of suits in the said court as the Lord Chancellor, with the advice and assistance of the Master of the Rolls and Vice-Chancellor, or one of them, shall by any general order or orders direct, in such manner and under such rules and regulations as by any general order or orders, to be also issued by the Lord Chancellor, with the advice and assistance aforesaid, shall be directed, and that it shall be lawful for either party to appeal by motion from the order made on such application to the Lord Chancellor, Master of the Rolls, or Vice-Chancellor, and that the order made on such appeal shall be final and conclusive;" and it is enacted, "That no such application as above mentioned shall in future be heard by any of the judges of the said Court of Chancery, except on appeal as hereinbefore provided:" and whereas the last-mentioned enactment has been found to be inconvenient: be it therefore enacted, that, notwithstanding the provisions of the said act, it shall be lawful for any of the judges of the said court to hear and determine any such application as mentioned in the said act in the first instance, if under special circumstances he shall think fit so to do.

27. That all exceptions for scandal, impertinence, and insufficiency, which according to the existing practice of the said Court are referred to the Masters of the said Court, shall not any longer be so referred, but shall be heard and determined by the said Court in the first instance.

28. That, notwithstanding any rule or practice of the said Court to the contrary, it shall be lawful for the said Court, at the hearing of any cause or of any further directions therein, to receive proof by affidavit of all proper parties being before the Court, and of all such matters as are necessary to be proved for enabling the said Court to order payment of any monies belonging to any married woman, and of all such other matters not directly in issue in the cause as in the opinion of the said Court may safely and properly be so proved.

29. That so much of an act made and passed in the 53 Geo. 3, [c. 24,] intituled "An Act to facilitate the Administration reverse, or alter any decree, order, act, matter, or thing made or done by any Lord Chancellor, Lord Keeper or Lords Commissioners for the Custody of the Great Seal, unless authorised by the Lord Chancellor, Lord Keeper or Lords Commissioners for the time being so to do, nor any power or authority to discharge, reverse, or alter any decree, order, act, matter, or thing made or done by the Master of the Rolls, and so much of an act made and passed in the 5 Vict., [c. 5.] intitled "An Act to make further Provisions for the Administration of Justice," as provides that no Vice-Chancellor appointed under the authority of that act shall have power or authority to discharge, reverse, or alter any decree, order, act, matter, or thing made or done by any other Vice-Chancellor to be appointed under that act, not being a predecessor in office of such Vice-Chancellor, nor any decree, order, act, matter, or thing made or done by any Lord Chancellor, unless authorised by the Lord Chancellor so to do, nor any power or authority to discharge, reverse, or alter any decree, order, act, matter, or thing made or done by the Master of the Rolls or the Vice-Chancellor for the time being appointed in pursuance of an act passed in the 53 Geo. 3, [c. 24.] intitled "An Act to facilitate the Administration of Justice," shall be and the same are respectively hereby repealed, so far as the same respectively apply to orders on motion or petition of course made by the Lord Chancellor, Master of the Rolls, or any of the Vice-Chancellors; and that it shall be lawful for the Master of the Rolls and the Vice-Chancellors respectively to discharge, reverse, or alter any order made on motion or petition of course by any other of them, or by the Lord Chancellor.

30. That it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, with the advice and consent of the Master of the Rolls and any one or more of the Vice-Chancellors, from time to time to make, rescind, and alter general rules and orders for better enabling the opinion of the said Court to be obtained on special cases, and for effectuating the purposes of this act as to the debts and liabilities of deceased persons, and for making any provisions which may be or be deemed necessary or proper as to amendment, revivor, and supplemental matter or relief, and as to costs of any proceedings under or in pursuance of this act, and for regulating the times and form and mode of procedure, and generally the practice of the said Court in respect of the matters to which this act relates, and every of them, and so far as may be found expedient for altering the course of proceeding hereinbefore prescribed in respect to such matters or any of them.

31. That all such general rules and orders shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament, if Parliament shall be then sitting, immediately upon the making and issuing the same, or, if Parliament shall not be then sitting, then within five days after the next meeting thereof; and that every such rule or order shall from and after the time in that behalf to be appointed by the Lord Chancellor, with such advice and consent as aforesaid, and if no time shall be so appointed, then from and after the making thereof, be binding and obligatory on the said Court, and be of like force and effect as if the provisions therein contained had been expressly enacted by Parliament: provided always, that if either of the Houses of Parliament shall, by any resolution passed at any time before such House of Parliament shall have actually sat thirty-six days after such rules, orders, and regulations shall have been laid before such House of Parliament, resolve that the whole or any part of such rules or orders ought not to continue in force, in such case the whole or such part thereof as shall be so included in such resolution shall from and after such resolution cease to be binding and obligatory on the said Court; provided also, that no such rule or order as aforesaid shall by virtue of this act be of the like force and effect as if the provisions therein contained had been expressly enacted by Parliament, unless the same shall be expressed to be made in pursuance of this act; and that every such rule or order so expressed to be made in pursuance of this act which shall not be laid before both Houses of Parliament within the time by this act limited for that purpose shall from and after the expiration of such time be absolutely void and of no effect.

32. That in the meantime and until any such general rules or orders shall be made, and in so far as the same, when made, shall not be applicable, the proceedings under this act shall be governed and regulated by the provisions herein contained so parties to special cases as in every other respect, be governed and regulated by the rules, orders, and practice of the said Court in suits instituted by bill, so far as the same can be applied thereto; and, subject to such general rules and orders as aforesaid, the costs of all proceedings under this act shall be in the discretion of the said Court.

33. That all decrees and orders made under the provisions of this act shall be subject to rehearing, appeal, and review, and may be discharged and varied, in the same and the like manner as decrees and orders of the said Court made in suits instituted by bill.

34. That the following words and expressions in this act shall have the several meanings hereby assigned to them, unless there be something either in the subject or in the context repugnant to such construction:

Words importing the singular number only shall include the plural number, and words importing the plural number only shall include the singular number:

Words importing the masculine gender only shall include females:

The expression "Lord Chancellor" shall mean and include the Lord Chancellor, Lord Keeper and Lords Commissioners of the Great Seal of the United Kingdom for the time being:

The word "Master" shall mean Master in Ordinary of the High Court of Chancery in England:

The word "lunatic" shall include idiots and persons of unsound mind, and whether found such by inquisition or not:

The word "guardian" shall mean father or testamentary guardian, or guardian appointed by the Court of Chancery (not being a special guardian appointed under the provisions of this act).

35. That this act shall commence and take effect from and after the 1st day of November, 1850.

36. That this act may be amended or repealed by any act to be passed in the present session of Parliament.

In the matter of A. B., late of —, in the county of —, banker, [or as the case may be], deceased.

Upon motion this day made unto this Court by Mr. —, of counsel for C. D., of —, the executor [or administrator] of the above-named A. B., [or upon the humble petition of C. D., of —, the executor (or administrator) of the said A. B., this day preferred unto the Right Honourable the Master of the Rolls for the reasons therein contained], it is ordered, that it be referred to the Master of this Court in rotation to take an account of the debts and liabilities affecting the personal estate of the said A. B., and to compute interest on such of the said debts and liabilities as carry interest after the rate of interest the same respectively carry; and the said Master is to cause an advertisement to be published in the London Gazette and such other public papers as he shall think fit for the persons claiming in respect of any such debts or liabilities to come in before the said Master, and prove their debts and claims, and he is to fix a peremptory day for that purpose; and such of the said creditors as shall not come in and prove their debts and claims by the time so to be limited are to be excluded the benefit of this order: and it is ordered, that the said Master do distinguish debts from liabilities, and liabilities certain from liabilities contingent: and it is ordered, that the personal estate of the said A. B. be applied in payment and satisfaction of such debts and liabilities of the said A. B. in a due course of administration; and for the better taking the said accounts and discovery of the matters aforesaid the parties are to produce before the said Master, upon oath, all deeds, books, papers, and writings in their custody or power relating thereto, and are to be examined upon interrogatories as the said Master shall direct; and any of the parties are to be at liberty to apply to the Court as there shall be occasion.

CAP. XXXVII.

An Act for the further Extension of Summary Jurisdiction in Cases of Larceny. [29th July, 1850.]

- Sect. 1. Recited Acts extended to all Cases in which the Age of the Person charged does not exceed sixteen Years. Offenders above fourteen Years of Age not to be liable to Punishment of Whipping.
2. Justice to ask whether Accused wishes the Charge to be tried by a Jury.
3. Act not to extend to Scotland.

Whereas by an act passed in the 10 & 11 Vict., [c. 82.] intitled "An Act for the more speedy Trial and Punishment of Juvenile Offenders," it is enacted, that every person who should subsequently to the passing of that act be charged with having committed or having attempted to commit, or with having been an aider, abettor, counsellor, or procurer in the commission of any offence which then was or thereafter should or might be by law deemed or declared to be simple larceny, or punishable as simple larceny, and whose age at the period of the commission or attempted commission of such offence should not, in the opinion of the justices before whom he or she should be brought or appear as thereafter mentioned, exceed the age of fourteen years, should, upon conviction thereof upon his own confession or upon proof before any two or more justices of the peace for any county, riding, division, borough, liberty, or place, in petty sessions assembled at the usual place and in open court, be punished as therein mentioned: and whereas by an act passed in the 11 & 12 Vict., [c. 59.] intitled "An Act for the more speedy Trial and Punishment of Juvenile Offenders in Ireland," it is enacted that every person who should subsequently to the passing of that act be charged with having committed or having attempted to commit, or with having been an aider, abettor, counsellor, or procurer in the commission of any offence in Ireland which then was or thereafter should or might be by law deemed or declared to be simple larceny, or punishable as simple larceny, and whose age at the period of the commission or attempted commission of such offence should not, in the opinion of the justices before whom he or she should be brought or appear as thereafter mentioned, exceed the age of fourteen years, should, upon conviction thereof upon his own confession or upon proof before any two or more justices of the peace for any county, riding, division, borough, liberty, or place, in petty sessions assembled at the usual place and in open court, be punished as therein mentioned: and whereas the expense and delay sustained in the prosecution of persons guilty of petty thefts tend to the increase of such offences; and it is expedient that the provisions of the said acts should be extended as hereinafter provided: be it enacted, &c., that the said recited acts, and the jurisdiction thereby given, and all the provisions therein contained, shall extend and be applicable to all cases in which any person shall subsequently to the passing of this act be charged with any such offence as in the said acts mentioned, and the age of the person so charged at the period of the commission or attempted commission of the offence shall not, in the opinion of the justices before whom he or she shall be brought or appear as therein mentioned, exceed the age of sixteen years; and that the provisions of the said recited acts for summons, warrant to summon and apprehend, and all other the provisions applicable to the cases where any person whose age is alleged not to exceed fourteen years shall be charged with any such offence as in the said acts mentioned, shall extend and be applicable to all cases in which any person whose age shall not exceed sixteen years shall be charged with any such offence as aforesaid: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall authorise or empower any justice or justices to order the punishment of whipping to be inflicted upon any offender whose age shall exceed the age of fourteen years.

2. That one of the justices before whom any person shall be charged and proceeded against under this act or the herebefore mentioned acts, before such person shall be asked whether he or she has any cause to shew why he or she should not be convicted, shall say to the person so charged these words, or words to the like effect: "We shall have to hear what you wish to say in answer to the charge against you; but if you wish the charge to be tried by a jury, you must object now to our deciding upon it at once;" and if such person, or a parent of such person, shall then object, the justices shall proceed with the charge as if the said acts had not been passed.

3. That nothing in this act contained shall extend to Scotland.

38. Act may be amended &c.

Whereas the Court of Chancery of the county palatine of Lancaster is an ancient court, and has been found greatly beneficial to the inhabitants of the said county palatine; and it is expedient, in order to extend the advantages of the said court, that certain alterations and improvements should be effected in the jurisdiction, practice, and proceedings thereof: and whereas the Queen's most excellent Majesty has been graciously pleased to sanction such alterations and improvements, notwithstanding that the same may affect her prerogatives and rights as Duchess of Lancaster, or may create a charge upon the revenues of the said duchy: be it therefore enacted, &c., that it shall be lawful, from and after the passing of this act, for the Chancellor of the Duchy and County Palatine of Lancaster for the time being, with the advice and consent of the Vice-Chancellor of the said county palatine for the time being, and of one of the Vice-Chancellors of the High Court of Chancery, to be named for that purpose, by writing under the hand of the Lord High Chancellor or other officer having the custody of the Great Seal, or (if more than one) of the chief commissioner or officer having such custody, by any rules or orders to be by him from time to time made with such advice and consent as aforesaid, to make such alterations as may seem to him expedient in the form of writs and commissions, and the mode of sealing, issuing, executing, and returning the same, and also in the form and mode of filing bills, answers, depositions, affidavits, and other proceedings, and in the form or mode of obtaining discovery, by answer in writing or otherwise, and in the form or mode of pleading and of taking evidence, and generally of proceeding to obtain relief in the Court of Chancery of the said county palatine, and in the general practice of the court, and also in the form and mode of proceeding before the registrar of the said court, and of drawing up and entering and inrolling orders and decrees, and of making and delivering copies of pleadings and other proceedings, and also to regulate the taxation, allowance, and payment of costs, and all other the business of the said court; and all such rules and orders shall be binding from such time as the said Chancellor, with such advice and consent as aforesaid, shall thereby direct, and shall have the same force and authority as if the same had been enacted by the authority of Parliament: provided always, that all such rules and regulations shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament within five days from the issuing thereof, if Parliament be then sitting, or, if not, then within five days from the next meeting of Parliament: provided also, that if either House of Parliament shall, by any resolution passed before such House shall have sat thirty-six days from and after the said orders and regulations shall have been laid before it, resolve that the same or any part thereof ought not to continue in force, then and in any such case the orders and regulations affected by such resolution shall cease to be binding on the said court; and no orders or regulations to be made in pursuance of this act shall be of any effect unless expressed to be made in pursuance of the power given by this act, nor shall the same continue in effect after the expiration of the time herein provided for laying the same before Parliament, unless they be laid before Parliament accordingly.

2. Provided always, and be it enacted, that whenever, by or under the authority of any act of Parliament, passed or to be passed, or by any General Order of the High Court of Chancery, any rules, orders, or regulations already have been or hereafter shall be made for the purpose of framing, regulating, or amending the proceedings, practice, or pleadings of the said High Court of Chancery, it shall be lawful for the Chancellor of the Duchy and County Palatine of Lancaster, with the consent and advice of the Vice-Chancellor of the said county palatine, and of such Vice-Chancellor of the High Court of Chancery as aforesaid, by rules or orders to be made in that behalf, to adopt all or any of such rules, orders, or regulations, or any part or parts thereof, with such variations therein or additions thereto as may be necessary or proper for adapting the same to the business and mode of proceeding of the Court of Chancery of the county palatine; and such last-mentioned rules and orders, if expressed to be made in pursuance of the authority of this act, shall be valid and binding from the making and issuing thereof, or such other time as shall be therein mentioned.

3. Provided always, and be it enacted, that nothing herein contained shall extend to take away or abridge the power heretofore possessed by the Chancellor of the Duchy and County Palatine of Lancaster and the Vice-Chancellor of the said county palatine, or either of them, of settling, altering, and amending the practice and course of proceeding in the said court of the county palatine, but such power shall, notwithstanding anything herein contained, continue and have the same force and effect as if this act had not been passed, save and except so far as the exercise of such power may in any respect be repugnant to or inconsistent with the provisions herein contained, and save also that neither the said Chancellor nor Vice-Chancellor alone shall alter or vary any order made by the said Chancellor, with such advice and consent as aforesaid.

4. That the Chancellor of the Duchy and County Palatine of Lancaster for the time being, by and with the advice and consent of the Vice-Chancellor of the said county palatine for the time, shall have full power and authority, by any General Orders to be from time to time made after this act shall take effect, to make such regulations as to the fees to be paid by suitors, or to be charged by or allowed to all or any of the officers of the said county palatine, and by or to the solicitors thereof, as to him may seem expedient, and to alter the same, with such advice and consent as aforesaid, when and as he may think fit.

5. That a table of all fees for the time being authorised by the said Chancellor and Vice-Chancellor of the said county palatine to be taken by any officer of the said county palatine court, or by any solicitor practising in the said court, for business done therein, shall be hung up in some conspicuous place in the office of the registrar of the said court; and that if any officer of the court shall, for anything done or pretended to be done relating to his office or employment, or under colour of doing anything relating to his office or employment, wilfully demand or receive, or allow any person to receive for him or on his account, any fee, gratuity, or emolument, or anything of value, other than what shall be allowed to be taken by him as aforesaid, the person so offending shall be deemed guilty of a contempt of court, and shall be punishable, according to the discretion of the said court, as for a contempt.

6. That the registrar of the said county palatine court shall hear and determine all applications for time to plead, answer, or demur, and for leave to amend bills, and for enlarging publication, and all such other matters relating to the conduct of suits and proceedings in the said court as the Chancellor of the Duchy and County Palatine of Lancaster, with the advice and consent of the Vice-Chancellor of the said county palatine, shall by any General Orders from time to time direct, in such manner and subject to such regulations as by such General Orders shall be directed.

7. That it shall be lawful for either party to appeal, by motion, from the order made by the registrar on such applications as aforesaid, to the Vice-Chancellor of the said county palatine, and that the order made on such appeal shall be final and conclusive, and that no such application directed to be heard and determined by the registrar as aforesaid shall in future be heard by the Chancellor of the duchy and county palatine aforesaid, nor shall any such application be heard by the Vice-Chancellor of the said county palatine, except on appeal as hereinbefore provided.

8. That it shall be lawful for the said registrar, on all applications made to him by virtue of this act, to direct that the costs of all or any of the parties shall be costs in the cause or matter, or to award such liquidated sum by way of costs to any of the parties as he shall think reasonable, and the costs so to be awarded shall be recoverable in like manner as costs directed to be paid by an order of the said county palatine court.

9. That in every case where an infant or person of unsound mind, not found to be a lunatic by any inquisition, shall be named as defendant in any suit in the said county palatine court, it shall be lawful for the registrar of the said court to assign a guardian to such defendant, for the purpose of putting in the answer and defending such suit, and to make and sign his certificate thereof.

10. That if any persons shall be desirous of obtaining the opinion of the court on the construction of a deed, will, or other instrument, or on any other matter in dispute over which the court may have jurisdiction, by virtue of this act or otherwise, it shall be lawful for such persons to present a petition to the court, stating the facts of the case, the draft of which shall be signed by counsel, and the name of such counsel shall appear on the petition, as signing the same on behalf of the parties thereto, and the court on hearing such petition may make such declaration of rights in respect of the subject matter thereof as to the court shall seem proper, and such declaration shall be binding on all persons in the same manner and to the same extent, and subject to appeal in the same manner, as a decree made on the hearing of a cause in which any one or more of the parties to the petition could be plaintiffs and the other parties or party defendants, and in which the facts stated in the petition had been proved: provided always, that in case any infant, lunatic, or person of unsound mind, or any married woman in respect of her real estate, or of any reversionary interest in personal estate, shall be interested in the matter of such petition, he or she shall not be made a party thereto unless and until the case to be stated in such petition shall have been submitted to the registrar, and shall be certified by him to be correctly stated as to the facts, and to be a proper case to be submitted to the court on the behalf of the party under such disability as aforesaid; and the registrar, before granting such certificate, shall require such facts to be verified by affidavit, and shall also require the assent to such case of the husband of any married woman, and of the committee of any lunatic, and of the guardian ad litem of any infant or person of unsound mind, which guardian may be appointed in the same manner as in the case of a party defendant to a suit.

11. That when under or by virtue of any act of Parliament already made and passed or which may hereafter be made and passed, or by any orders or regulations made in pursuance thereof, application is authorised or allowed to be made by petition or motion or otherwise to the High Court of Chancery or any judge of the said court, and summary jurisdiction to be exercised thereon, (unless in any act of Parliament to be hereafter passed the contrary be expressly enacted), it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery of the said county palatine, so far only as regards all persons and property within its jurisdiction, to exercise the like summary jurisdiction, and in the same manner, and subject to the same restrictions, in all respects as the said High Court of Chancery or any judge thereof might exercise in the like matters.

12. That all monies payable in respect of lands situate within the said county palatine, and which are authorised to be paid into or deposited in the Bank of England to the account of the Accountant-General of the High Court of Chancery, under and by virtue of the "Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845," or any local or special act passed or to be passed incorporating the provisions of the said last-mentioned act, or otherwise authorising the taking or using of lands situate in the said county palatine, and also that all monies or securities held by any party who might be sued in the Court of Chancery of the said county palatine in respect thereof, and which under and by virtue of an act made and passed in the Parliament held in the 10 & 11 Vict., [c. 96,] intituled "An Act for better securing Trust Funds, and for the Relief of Trustees," might be in like manner paid or transferred into or deposited in the Bank of England, to the account of the said Accountant-General, may, from and after the passing of this act, be in like manner paid or transferred into or deposited in the Bank of England to the joint account of the clerk of the council of the duchy of Lancaster and of the registrar and comptroller of the said county palatine court in the matter in respect whereof such payment, transfer, or deposit shall be made, and the receipt of one of the cashiers of the said Bank shall be a full discharge to the person paying or transferring or depositing the same; and such monies and securities, and all costs of application in respect thereof, shall be dealt with by the said Court of Chancery of the county palatine in the same manner as the same might be dealt with by the High Court of Chancery or by the Lord High Chancellor, or any of the judges of the said High Court, if such monies or securities had been paid or transferred into or deposited in the Bank of England to the credit of the Accountant-General of that court; and the lands in respect of which such payment, transfer, or deposit shall be made may be dealt with in the same manner as if it had been made in manner prescribed by the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act: provided always, that no monies shall be so paid or deposited under or by virtue of the "Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845," or any local or special act as aforesaid, in case the party who would have been entitled to the rents and profits of the lands in respect of which such monies shall be payable, or his or her guardian or committee in case of infancy or lunacy, shall at any time before such payment or deposit serve or cause to be served a notice in writing at the office of the company taking the lands, requesting them not to make the payment or deposit.

13. That in all matters over which the said court of the said county palatine may have jurisdiction it shall be lawful for the Vice-Chancellor for the time being of the said county palatine, when out of the limits of the jurisdiction of the said court, to hear and determine all pleas, demurrers, exceptions, applications for injunctions, both upon notice and ex parte, for dissolving injunctions, for the appointment of receivers, for the payment of money into and out of court, or for confirming reports, and all motions, petitions, and other matters for facilitating the progress of any suit or business pending in the said court which he might lawfully hear and determine within the limits of the jurisdiction thereof; and all orders made by him upon the hearing of any pleas, demurrers, exceptions, and applications as aforesaid shall be as valid and binding upon the parties as if the same had been made within the limits of the jurisdiction of the said court.

14. That in all cases where any person who shall have commenced any suit or other proceeding, or entered an appearance in any suit or proceeding, in the said court of the county palatine, or shall come in as a creditor, claimant, or purchaser, or otherwise submitted to the jurisdiction of the said court, cannot, by reason either of his person or goods being out of such jurisdiction, be made amenable to the process of such court, and also in all cases where any such person as aforesaid shall have died, or become bankrupt or insolvent, and his real or personal representatives, or the assignees of his estate and effects, (as the case may be), or any of them, who may be necessary parties to the continuance of the said suit or proceeding, shall be out of the jurisdiction of the said court, it shall be lawful for the Vice-Chancellor of the said county palatine, upon special application being made to him, whether within or without the said county, by any party to or person interested in such suit or proceeding, founded upon an affidavit verifying the facts of the case, to order and direct that service of any order, notice, subpoena, letter missive, or other process shall be made and be deemed good service upon any such person, real or personal representative, or assignee as aforesaid, at any place within the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland or the Isle of Man, upon such terms and in such manner as to the said Vice-Chancellor shall seem reasonable and proper, and afterwards, if it shall be necessary, upon an affidavit of such service had, to order an appearance to be entered for the person so served; and thereupon it shall be lawful for the said county palatine court to make such decree or order consequent upon such service so made as aforesaid as before the passing of this act, or under the provisions of this act, might have been made in case such service as aforesaid had been duly made within the jurisdiction of the said court.

15. That whenever a plaintiff or defendant in any suit or proceeding in which a decree or order shall have been made by the said county palatine court shall reside or withdraw his person or goods out of the jurisdiction of the said court, and also whenever any decree or order of the same court cannot be fully enforced by reason of the non-residence of any party to be bound thereby within the jurisdiction of the said court, then and in every such case it shall be lawful for her Majesty's High Court of Chancery, upon the application of any person entitled to the benefit of such decree or order, and upon the production of a transcript of such decree or order, or such part thereof respectively as cannot be enforced for the reasons aforesaid, under the signature of the registrar of the said county palatine court, and an affidavit that by reason of such non-residence or removal as aforesaid such decree or order, or such part thereof as aforesaid, cannot be enforced, to make such decree or order, or so much thereof respectively as cannot be enforced for any of the reasons aforesaid, a decree or order of the said High Court of Chancery, and thereupon such decree or order, or such part thereof respectively as aforesaid, shall and may be enforced against such of the parties bound by the same as shall be within the jurisdiction of the said High Court of Chancery, and all proceedings shall and may be had thereupon as if such decree or order had been originally made by the said High Court of Chancery, and all the reasonable costs and charges of and consequent upon such application shall and may be recovered in like manner as if the same were part of such decree or order.

16. That from and after the commencement of this act no petition of rehearing by way of appeal from any decree or order made by the Vice-Chancellor for the time being of the said county palatine shall be presented but within the space of six calendar months from the time of making the same, unless the Chancellor of the said duchy and county palatine, upon special application being made to him for that purpose, and after hearing counsel upon the merits of the case, shall otherwise direct: provided nevertheless, that the Vice-Chancellor of the said county palatine shall, at his own discretion, be at liberty to hear petitions for rehearing, and also to rehear any matters previously decided by him in the court of the said county palatine; but any order made on such rehearing shall be deemed an original order, with reference to the right to appeal therefrom.

17. That the service of every writ of subpoena to attend and give evidence, or subpoena duces tecum, hereafter to be issued out of the said county palatine court, and served upon any person out of the jurisdiction thereof, shall be as valid and effectual for compelling the attendance of such person at any time and place to be named in such writ of subpoena, to be there examined, either before the registrar of the said court, as well in his capacity of examiner as in that of master of the said court, or before commissioners under any commission to be issued by the said court for the examination of witnesses, or to be examined viva voce at the hearing of any matter or suit before the said court or before the registrar, or for compelling the attendance of such person by virtue of any writ of subpoena duces tecum, and shall entitle the party suing out the same to all the like remedies, by action and otherwise, as if the same had been served within the jurisdiction of the said court; and in case the person so served shall not attend according to the exigency of such writ, it shall be lawful for the said county palatine court, upon affidavit of the personal service of such writ, to transmit a certificate of such default, under the hand of the registrar of the said court, to the Court of Queen's Bench in England, to the Court of Justiciary in Scotland, or to the Court of Queen's Bench in Ireland; and the said last-mentioned courts respectively shall and may thereupon proceed against and punish, by attachment or otherwise, according to the course and practice of the said respective courts, the person so having made default, in such and the like manner as they might have done if such person had refused or neglected to appear in obedience to a writ of subpoena or other process issued to compel the attendance of witnesses out of such last-mentioned courts respectively.

18. Provided always, and be it enacted, that the said last-mentioned courts respectively shall not in any case proceed against or punish any person, nor shall any such person be liable to any action, for having made default by not appearing in obedience to any writ of subpoena or writ of subpoena duces tecum or other process for that purpose issued under the authority of this act, unless it be made to appear to such courts respectively that a reasonable and sufficient sum of money to defray the expenses of coming and attending to give evidence, and of returning from giving such evidence, had been tendered to such person at the time when such writ of subpoena or writ of subpoena duces tecum or other process was served upon him.

19. That it shall be lawful for any commissioner for taking affidavits to be made use of in causes, matters, and things depending in the court of the duchy chamber of Lancaster, at Westminster, or for any Master Extraordinary of the High Court of Chancery, to administer an oath to or take the affirmation (where allowed by law) of any person out of the jurisdiction of the said county palatine court who shall be desirous of making an affidavit to be used in any suit or matter pending before such last-mentioned court; and every such affidavit so sworn or affirmed as aforesaid shall be as valid and effectual for all the purposes for which the same shall be required as if the same had been sworn or affirmed before the proper officer of the said county palatine court within the jurisdiction of the court; and every person wilfully forswearing himself or making false affirmation in such affidavit, and being lawfully convicted thereof, shall be liable to the penalties of wilful and corrupt perjury.

20. That it shall be lawful for the Chancellor of the Duchy and County Palatine of Lancaster for the time being to appoint a fit and proper person resident within the county palatine of Lancaster, to be and to be called "The Messenger of the Court of Chancery of the County Palatine of Lancaster," to attend upon the said county palatine court, and to execute the process thereof; and from time to time, upon the death, resignation, or removal of any such person, to appoint a successor to the said office; and that the person so appointed as aforesaid shall hold his office during the pleasure of the said Chancellor, and may be removed in a summary manner, and may and shall receive such fees for executing the process of the said court as the said Chancellor and the Vice-Chancellor of the said county palatine shall from time to time, by any general order to be made in pursuance of the provisions hereinafter contained, authorise and direct.

21. That the gaoler or keeper for the time being of her Majesty's gaol at Lancaster, called "Lancaster Castle," is hereby authorised and required to receive into his custody in such gaol every person arrested and conveyed thither by such messenger as aforesaid, by virtue of any writ, warrant, or other process issuing out of the said county palatine court, and to produce and deal with such person as the said court shall from time to time direct; and every such person as aforesaid shall be maintained and provided for in the same manner as if he had been arrested and brought to such gaol by virtue of any writ, warrant, order, or other process issued out of the Court of Common Pleas of the said county palatine, or any of the superior courts of law or equity at Westminster, or committed for contempt of any of the said last-mentioned courts; and all the expenses of maintaining and providing for every person so arrested or committed to the said gaol as aforesaid shall be defrayed out of such portion of the county rate of the said county palatine as for the time being shall be applicable to the support of the debtors confined in the said gaol.

22. That from and after the appointment of such messenger as aforesaid all and singular the powers, authorities, and duties of the messenger for the time being of the duchy of Lancaster, and of any deputy appointed by him, shall absolutely cease and determine within the limits of the said county palatine.

23. And whereas it is expedient that the jurisdiction of the said county palatine in cases of lunacy should be abolished: be it therefore enacted, that from and after the passing of this act all the power, authority, and jurisdiction of the said county palatine court over the persons and estates of idiots and lunatics within the limits of the said county palatine shall cease and determine, except as to the cases of those persons who shall at the time of the commencement of this act have been found to be of unsound mind under or by virtue of any commission issuing from the said county palatine court, in all which last-mentioned cases the authority and jurisdiction of the said court of the county palatine shall continue in as full force and effect as if this act had not been passed, anything herein contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

24. And for removing all doubts in respect of the effect of an act passed in the 1 & 2 Vict., [c. 110,] intitled "An Act for abolishing Arrest on Means Process in Civil Actions, except in certain Cases, for extending the Remedies of Creditors against the Property of Debtors, and for amending the Laws for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors in England," whereby it was enacted, that all decrees and orders of courts of equity, whereby any sum of money, or any costs, charges, or expenses, should be payable to any person, should have the effect of judgments in the superior courts of common law, and the persons to whom any such monies, or costs, charges, or expenses, should be payable were to be deemed judgment creditors within the meaning of the said act, and all powers thereby given to the judges of the superior courts of common law with respect to matters depending in the same courts should and might be exercised by courts of equity with respect to matters therein depending, and all remedies thereby given to judgment creditors were in like manner given to persons to whom any monies, or costs, charges, or expenses, were by such orders or rules respectively directed to be paid, and also as to the effect of the several acts passed in the second and third years and in the third and fourth years of the reign of her Majesty amending the said recited act, be it declared and enacted, that all the remedies, authorities, and provisions of the recited act, so amended as aforesaid, and of the said acts amending the same, applicable to her Majesty's superior courts of common law at Westminster, and the judgments and proceedings therein, do extend and are applicable to the Court of Chancery of the county palatine of Lancaster within the limits of the jurisdiction thereof, and shall have the same effect in all respects as the judgments of any of her Majesty's said superior courts at Westminster under and by virtue of the said recited act, amended as aforesaid; and all powers and authorities thereby given to the judges or any judge of her Majesty's superior courts at Westminster, with respect to matters depending in the same courts, shall and may be exercised by the Chancellor of the said duchy or Vice-Chancellor of the said court of the county palatine with respect to matters therein depending and within the jurisdiction thereof: provided always, that no decree or order of the said last-mentioned court shall by virtue of the said recited act or this act affect any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, as to perchasers, mortgagees, or creditors, unless and until a memorandum or minute, containing the name, and the usual or the last known place of abode, and the title, trade, or profession of the person whose estate is intended to be affected thereby, and the name of the court, and the title of the cause or matter in which such decree or order shall have been made, and the date of such decree or order, and the amount of the sum of money, costs, charges, or expenses thereby made payable, shall be left with the prothonotary or deputy prothonotary of her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas at Lancaster, or some other officer to be appointed for that purpose by the said court, who shall forthwith enter the same particulars in a book in alphabetical order, by the name of the person whose estate is to be affected thereby; and such officer shall be entitled for every such entry to the sum of 2s. 6d.; and all persons shall be at liberty to search the same book, on payment of the sum of 1s.

25. That it shall be lawful for the Chancellor of the Duchy and County Palatine of Lancaster, (if he shall think fit), by an order under his hand, to direct that all attorneys and solicitors of any of the superior courts of law or equity at Westminster, and all attorneys of the Court of Common Pleas at Lancaster, on being registered as by this act provided, may appear and prosecute or defend any suit or proceedings in the Court of Chancery of the said county palatine, and that the office and privileges of the clerks in court of the said court shall cease and determine accordingly; and thereupon the said Chancellor, with the advice and consent of the Vice-Chancellor of the Court of Chancery of the county palatine, shall and he is hereby empowered to make all such orders as may be necessary or proper in respect of or consequent on the abolition of the said office.

26. Provided always, and be it enacted, that in case the Chancellor of the said duchy and county palatine shall make such order as aforesaid for the determination of the office of clerks in court, it shall be lawful for the said Chancellor, and he is hereby required, at any time within six calendar months after the date of such order, to receive any claims which may be made for compensation by any person holding that office at the time of such order, in respect of loss occasioned by the abolition of the office, and to award and determine the amount, if any, of compensation proper to be allowed to such claimant, either in a gross sum or by way of annuity for life, having regard to the loss sustained, and the conditions on which any such clerk in court may have been appointed to his office, and to any notice which may have been given to him that the same was to be held subject to the abolition or regulation thereof; and for the purposes aforesaid the said Chancellor shall have full power to examine the said clerks in court or any other persons upon oath, and to compel the attendance of all such persons, and the production of all necessary books, papers, and accounts and documents; and the said Chancellor shall, after such inquiry, certify under his hand the amount of compensation proper to be paid to every such clerk in court as aforesaid.

27. That in case of the abolition of the said clerks in court, every attorney or solicitor desirous of practising in the Court of Chancery of the said county palatine shall enter or cause to be entered his name and address with the registrar of the said court; and that, until all compensation to be awarded to the clerks in court or any of them shall have been paid and satisfied, such sum, not exceeding 5l., as the Chancellor of the said duchy and county palatine shall, by any general order to be inserted in the table of fees, from time to time direct, shall be paid by or on behalf of every such attorney or solicitor to the registrar, before his name shall be entered with the said registrar; and the monies so paid shall be paid by the registrar into court to an account to be entitled the "Fee Fund Account;" and further, that until all monies awarded as compensation to the said clerks in court or any of them shall have been paid and satisfied, it shall be lawful for the Chancellor of the Duchy and County Palatine of Lancaster to direct that the fees, or such portions as he shall think proper of any of the fees to be allowed by such table of fees as in this act is directed to be kept, shall be paid to the registrar, to be by him paid into court to the account of the said Fee Fund.

28. That the compensation to be awarded to the said clerks in court or any of them shall be paid from time to time out of the Fee Fund; and if the same be insufficient, then out of the general revenues of the said duchy, as the said Chancellor of the said duchy and county palatine shall by warrant or order under his hand from time to time direct; but in case of their being paid out of the revenues of the said duchy, the same shall be repaid to the Receiver-General of the said duchy out of the Fee Fund, as the said Chancellor shall from time to time by order under his hand direct; and the payments directed to be made to the said Fee Fund shall continue until such repayment, and all other repayments directed to be made by this act out of the same, shall have been made.

29. That if the Chancellor of the Duchy and County Palatine of Lancaster for the time being shall at any time think fit to direct, by warrant under his hand, that a fixed salary shall be paid to the registrar of the Court of Chancery of the said county palatine, in lieu of fees, then and thenceforth there shall be paid and payable out of the said Fee Fund, or if the same be not sufficient for that purpose, then by the Receiver-General for the time being of the duchy of Lancaster, out of the revenues of the said duchy, as and for the salary to the registrar for the time being of the said court of the county palatine, such annual sum as the Chancellor for the time being of the said duchy and county palatine shall from time to time, by warrant under his hand, authorise and direct; and such salary shall grow due from day to day, but shall be payable on such days as the said Chancellor shall by such warrant as aforesaid direct, and shall be paid to the person entitled thereto, or his executors or administrators, free from all deductions out of the same, except the tax on income; and all payments made out of the revenues of the said duchy shall be repaid out of the said Fee Fund.

30. That, in the event of such fixed salary being awarded, the said registrar for the time being shall once in every year, or oftener, if required by the Chancellor of the said duchy, on such day as shall be appointed for that purpose by the Vice-Chancellor of the said county palatine, make out a full and true account of all fees received by him by virtue of his appointment during the preceding year, or subsequent to his last account, and shall have such account audited by the Vice-Chancellor, who is hereby required to audit the same, and if found correct to allow the same by putting his signature thereto and to a duplicate copy thereof; and that in such account and audit there may and shall be charged and allowed such sums of money as to the said Vice-Chancellor shall seem reasonable for the rent, taxes, and cleaning of the offices where the business of the county palatine court is transacted, for providing the said offices with coals, candles, and other necessary articles, and for the books and stationery supplied by such registrar for carrying on the business of the said offices, and for salaries of clerks, expenses of journeys, postages, and carriage of parcels, and all other incidental and necessary expenses.

31. That the said registrar shall within ten days after every such account shall be so audited as aforesaid transmit the duplicate copy of such account, signed by the Vice-Chancellor as before directed, to the auditor for the time being of the duchy of Lancaster.

32. That the said registrar shall from time to time, when he shall transmit the duplicate copy of the said account of fees to the auditor for the time being of the said duchy of Lancaster, as before directed, at the same time pay into court to the "Fee Fund Account" the total amount of fees which by such account shall appear to be due from the said registrar; and the said Chancellor of the Duchy and County Palatine of Lancaster in such case may and is hereby authorised and empowered to take from the registrar for the time being of the said county palatine court such security, by bond, recognisance, or otherwise, as to the said Chancellor shall seem fit, binding such registrar, together with one or more sufficient surety or sureties, in such penal sum or penal sums as to the said Chancellor shall seem meet, for the due accounting for all fees and for all sums of money which shall be received by such registrar by virtue of his appointment, or under any order of the said county palatine court respectively in any matter or suit pending in the said court.

33. That it shall be lawful for the said Chancellor of the Duchy and County Palatine of Lancaster, after he shall have directed a fixed salary to be paid to the registrar as aforesaid, from time to time to appoint, by writing under his hand, such competent persons as he shall think fit to act either as district or as deputy registrars of the said Court of Chancery of the said county palatine during the pleasure of the Chancellor for the time being of the said duchy and county palatine, and to assign to any district registrar a district; and such district registrars within their districts, and such deputy registrars, shall and may have and exercise all such powers and authorities in respect of any matters referred to them by the said court by any general or special order as might be exercised by the registrar; and the fees, or salary payable out of fees, payable to every such district or deputy registrar shall be such as the Chancellor of the said duchy and county palatine, with the advice and consent of the Vice-Chancellor of the county palatine, shall direct, and shall be included in the table of fees hereby directed to be kept; and the acts of such district or deputy registrars in respect of all matters referred to them by the said court shall be as valid and effectual, and subject to revision, in the same manner as if they were performed by the registrar of the court.

34. Provided always, and be it enacted, that it shall not be lawful for any registrar, district or deputy registrar, of the said court, during the time he shall hold and exercise the office of registrar, district or deputy registrar, of the said court, either directly or indirectly, by himself, his partner, clerk, or other person, to practise in the said Court of Chancery of the county palatine, either as solicitor originally retained for any party in any matter pending in the said court, or as agent for any other attorney or solicitor practising in the said court, nor participate in any fees payable to any attorney or solicitor so practising; and that any registrar, district or deputy registrar, being proved to the satisfaction of the said court for the time being to have so practised, or to have participated in any fees as aforesaid, contrary to the meaning and intent of this act, shall be deemed to have committed a contempt of court, and shall be liable to dismissal from his office, or to the payment of such fine, or liable to such other punishment, as to the said court for the time being shall seem fit.

35. That in all proceedings under and by virtue of this act there shall be the same jurisdiction as to costs vested in the said court of the county palatine as such court could exercise in any other cause or matter; and the orders of the said court made in pursuance of this act shall be subject to appeal in the same manner in all respects as any other orders of the court.

36. That in this act the following words and expressions shall have the several meanings hereby assigned to them, unless there be something in the subject or context repugnant to such construction; (that is to say), "the said county palatine court" shall mean the Court of Chancery of the county palatine of Lancaster; words importing the singular number shall include the plural number, and words importing the plural number shall include the singular number; and words importing the masculine gender only shall include females as well as males; and words importing individuals shall include bodies corporate.

37. That this act shall commence and take effect on the 1st day of November, 1850.

38. That this act may be amended or repealed by any act to be passed in the present session of Parliament.

LONDON, OCTOBER 5, 1850.

A SHORT time before the Vacation a pamphlet* was published containing a most desperate onslaught upon the resolutions framed by the Masters in Chancery for the improvement of the mode of conducting business in their offices. We were not able to notice this production before the rising of the Courts, and we have, therefore, deferred it till a period when the approximation of the time for the re-opening of the Masters' offices, may make the subject more attractive to our practical readers. We are not going to criticise with any minuteness the style or the animus of Mr. Carrighan's pamphlet, their defects being too patent to require any dissection at our hands. Suffice it to say, that the animus is that of most determined and headlong hostility to every change in general, and to the change in the routine of the Masters' offices in particular; and that the style is a combination of the vituperative and the sneering. Nevertheless Mr. Carrighan's pamphlet is sufficiently plausible and well written to do mischief, and therefore is not undeserving of notice.

The fundamental feature of the General Orders of the 3rd June, and of the Masters' resolutions, is, as everybody now knows, the abolition of the hour-warrant system, and the substitution for it of cause lists; and against this and its consequences it is that Mr. Carrighan's wrath and eloquence are directed. Now, we have no hesitation in saying, that if the Masters' resolutions were practically as bad as it is possible to imagine them, they would still have done good, because they have struck down the abominably bad antecedent system, and have compelled even such fierce antagonists of law reform as Mr. Carrighan, to suggest improvements. It is not new in politics, that with a certain class of politicians, so long as it appears possible to ward off all change, the argument is, that the existing system is perfect; but that when at length it is seen that the existing system is bad, and must go sooner or later, then the battle is fought in detail against every change specifically proposed, and the argument is, "The change you propose cannot work. Why, if you must change, do you not do so and so, which would be far more efficient?" Of this school are Mr. Carrighan and his party in regard to Chancery reform. They at length concede indirectly, if not in terms, that the old hour-warrant system had defects, and that it may be possible to substitute something more perfect. Hear Mr. Carrighan on this point.

"The pretence," he says, "for these changes, I apprehend, is the circumstance, which occasionally happens, of the Master being disengaged during the interval, or a portion of the interval, of the hour assigned to a warrant, owing to the parties either not attending the warrant, or to the business in hand not occupying the whole hour. Now, is there no remedy for this, short of the extravagant one proposed? I think there is. Why not, instead of hourly warrants, as heretofore, issue them returnable at intervals of half, or even, in small matters, a quarter of an hour from each other?"

"Adopt this simple change, and 'cedit questio'—no more need be said. The public time would then be sufficiently economised, and the embarrassing and unseemly spectacle of ten Masters disagreeing in their views, and promulgating opposite and incongruous modes of proceedings in their respective offices, would be avoided.

* Observations on the Resolutions &c. By T. Carrighan, Solicitor. London: Wildy. 1850.

"By changing the system of hourly into half-hourly warrants, the amount of cases disposed of would be doubled. By issuing, in simple cases, four warrants within the hour, the rate of business would be quadrupled. The only inconvenience which could be alleged against this mode is one which could be easily obviated. It might be urged, that the matters which are discussed before the Master are of unequal importance; that some of them, from their nature, are calculated to occupy more time in discussing than others; and that it would frequently happen, that the half or the quarter of an hour, as the case may be, might be too much in one case, and not enough in another. Now, this difficulty may be sufficiently got rid of by classifying the cases, and assigning the early portion of the day to those cases (observing here the principle of four warrants to the hour) which are of minor importance, such as applications for time to answer, to amend, to name commissioners, to consider decrees and orders, creditors' claims of a simple character, &c., and appropriating the second and larger division of the day to those cases which, from their more important and special character, are likely to absorb the whole time allotted to the warrant, which, with respect to this class of cases, I would suggest, should be half an hour.

"Should, in any case, a warrant occupy more than the allotted time, and thus encroach upon the succeeding warrant, the inconvenience to the party thus kept waiting would be inconsiderable, and not to be named when contrasted with the monstrous inconvenience and physical impossibilities of the projected scheme.

"On the contrary, should the discussion occupy less than the allotted time, or should the warrant go off by reason of the non-attendance of the parties, the interval occupied (from the warrants following each other so closely) would be so small, that the loss thereby to the suitor would, in the long run, be nothing compared to the loss of time, delay, and expense which would befall him under the suggested innovations—in fact, it would be inappreciable."

This admission of the imperfection of the old system is of itself valuable. Whether the suggestions are practically so, is a matter which the Masters may perhaps consider, when they have tried somewhat extensively their own plans, and found them fail.

Now let us proceed to consider the way in which the Masters have attempted to work out in practice their resolutions. Their rules differ in detail, but agree in the main. They all provide for the separation of short from long matters. Master Tinney's rules provide for taking certain business, of its nature unopposed and short, from the sitting of the Master till half-past eleven every day; for taking all pleading business at and after three in the day; and as to all other business, they provide that there shall be a list of short causes to be taken from half-past eleven to half-past twelve, and of long causes to be taken from half-past twelve. The rules of the other Masters differ a little in detail from these, but all provide for a list of short causes to be taken at a certain time, and a list of long causes to be taken at another time; every cause to be heard and disposed of, if practicable, in its turn.

The objection to this system is said to be the uncertainty of the time at which any cause may be called on, and the consequent frequently useless consumption of the solicitor's time, in attending or having somebody in attendance to watch. To illustrate the anticipated difficulty and inconvenience, Mr. Carrighan frames an imaginary synopsis of the assumed engagements for one day of a solicitor, (having a business of from thirty to eighty Chancery suits, besides common law and other matters), which is as follows:—

Lord Chancellor.	V. C. England.	V. C. Bruce.	V. C. Wigram.	M. Rolls.	Master Dunderdon.	Master Hens.
Sparrow v. Hawk. Appeal in Paper.	NIL	Gull v. Gudgeon. Cause in Paper.	Patrick v. Scott. Minutes to be spoken to.	NIL	Bull v. Wrangle. Warrant on proposal for Receiver.	NIL

Master Farrer.	Master Ross.	Master Senior.	Master Richards.	Master Brougham.	Master Tinney.	Master Kindersley.
St. George Steam Company. Ex p. Pym. Meeting to inquire Contributors.	NIL	Badger v. Figg. Warrant on creditors' claims.	NIL	NIL	Pigeon v. Pike. To consider decree.	NIL

Master Elliot.	Taxing Master Miles.	Taxing Master Waterwright.	Taxing Master Barnes.	Taxing Master Pollett.	Taxing Master Perkes.	Taxing Master Martineau.
Fox v. Ginn. Warrant to settle Conveyance.	NIL	NIL	Smith v. Wiggins. Warrant at 12 to tax costs.	NIL	Brown v. Badger. Warrant to tax costs.	NIL

Of course, what is meant to be proved by this table is, that if all the matters in which a solicitor is engaged in a given day, come on at once, he cannot attend them all—a conclusion at which one might arrive without any very elaborate demonstration. But the fallacy of the argument against the new regulations, as compared with the old ones, is, the taking it for granted that, under the old, a solicitor, with a great mass of business, could insure that each portion should come on at a different time; and that, under the new system, they must all come on at the same time. If, under the old system, a solicitor had an appeal in the Chancellor's Court, two causes in the Vice-Chancellors' Courts, and one long warrant in a winding-up case, he could no more be sure of being able to attend to his different other warrants in the Masters' and Taxing Masters' offices, than he can under the new system. That the warrants in the Masters' offices were at fixed times, did not help him, because the appeal and the causes by their rank, and the winding-up warrant by virtue of its length, would necessarily, if they came on, exclude the ordinary warrants; and they required to be watched, while the solicitor was attending any such ordinary warrants. It might happen under the old system, and it may happen under the new one, that, with such a multiplicity of business as is portioned out in Mr. Carrighan's table, all things should so arrange themselves as that each portion should come on at a separate time; such a combination would be very unlikely, however, under either or any system; and the whole difficulty, in effect, resolves itself into that of watching, to enable the solicitor to attend, by himself or by his clerks, the business of the greatest importance; or to oscillate between different courts and different offices, giving a portion of attention to each.

We do not say that it is improbable, that, under the new system, a very extensive business may require a larger staff of clerks, if every portion of it is to be attended to as it is called on. But the result of that will be, that, if the solicitor is at greater expense, he will get through his business with proportionate rapidity, and therefore with proportionate advantage. In fine, the old system enabled a solicitor to undertake more business than he could get through, except by allowing his client to be delayed, and the time of public officers to be wasted; while the new one will compel him to get through his business as fast as the public officers are ready to dispatch it, to the saving of the time of the client and the public. But inasmuch as with solicitors, as well as with other professional men, the measure of their annual gains is the business done, and not merely the business undertaken to be done, it is difficult to see how a solicitor, with a large and continually inflowing current of business—and it is only on behalf of such that the cry of alarm is raised—can be a loser by a system which will enable him to get through a larger quantity of business in any given period.

 60. Act may be amended &c.

Whereas an act was passed in the 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, [c. 60,] intituled "An Act for amending the Laws respecting Conveyances and Transfers of Estates and Funds vested in Trustees and Mortgagees, and for enabling Courts of Equity to give Effect to their Decrees and Orders in certain Cases:" and whereas an act was passed in the 4 & 5 Will. 4, [c. 23,] intituled "An Act for the Amendment of the Law relative to the Escheat and Forfeiture of Real and Personal Property holden in Trust:" and whereas an act was passed in the 1 & 2 Vict., [c. 69,] intituled "An Act to remove Doubts respecting Conveyances of Estates vested in Heirs and Devisees of Mortgagees:" and whereas it is expedient that the provisions of the said acts should be consolidated and enlarged: be it therefore enacted, &c., that all proceedings under the said acts or any of them commenced before the passing of this act may be proceeded with under the said recited acts, or according to the provisions of this act, as shall be thought expedient, and, subject as aforesaid, that the said recited acts shall be and the same are hereby repealed: provided always, that the several acts repealed by the said recited acts shall not be revived, and that such repeal shall only be on and after this act coming into operation.

2. And whereas it is expedient to define the meaning in which certain words are hereafter used: it is declared, that the several words hereinafter named are herein used and applied in the manner following respectively; that is to say—

The word "lands" shall extend to and include manors, messuages, tenements, and hereditaments, corporeal and incorporeal, of every tenure or description, whatever may be the estate or interest therein:

The word "stock" shall mean any fund, annuity, or security transferable in books kept by any company or society established or to be established, or transferable by deed alone, or by deed accompanied by other formalities, and any share or interest therein:

The word "seised" shall be applicable to any vested estate for life or of a greater description, and shall extend to estates at law and in equity, in possession or in futurity, in any lands:

The word "possessed" shall be applicable to any vested estate less than a life estate, at law or in equity, in possession or in expectancy, in any lands:

The words "contingent right," as applied to lands, shall mean a contingent or executory interest, a possibility coupled with an interest, whether the object of the gift or limitation of such interest or possibility be or be not ascertained, also a right of entry, whether immediate or future, and whether vested or contingent:

The words "convey" and "conveyance," applied to any person, shall mean the execution by such person of every necessary or suitable assurance for conveying or disposing to another lands whereof such person is seised or entitled to a contingent right, either for the whole estate of the person conveying or disposing, or for any less estate, together with the performance of all formalities required by law to the validity of such conveyance, including the acts to be performed by married women and tenants in tail in accordance with the provisions of an act passed in the 3 & 4 Will. 4, [c. 74,] intituled "An Act for the Abolition of Fines and Recoveries, and the Substitution of more simple Modes of Assurance," and including also surrenders and other acts which a tenant of customary or copyhold lands can himself perform preparatory to or in aid of a complete assurance of such customary or copyhold lands:

The words "assign" and "assignment" shall mean the execution and performance by a person of every necessary or suitable deed or act for assigning, surrendering, or otherwise transferring lands of which such person is possessed, either for the whole estate of the person so possessed or for any less estate:

The word "transfer" shall mean the execution and performance of every deed and act by which a person entitled to stock can transfer such stock from himself to another:

The words "Lord Chancellor" shall mean as well the Lord Chancellor of Great Britain as any Lord Keeper or Lords Commissioners of the Great Seal for the time being:

The words "Lord Chancellor of Ireland" shall mean as well the Lord Chancellor of Ireland as any Keeper or Lords Commissioners of the Great Seal of Ireland for the time being:

The word "trust" shall not mean the duties incident to an estate conveyed by way of mortgage; but, with this exception, the words "trust" and "trustee" shall extend to and include implied and constructive trusts, and shall extend to and include cases where the trustee has some beneficial estate or interest in the subject of the trust, and shall extend to and include the duties incident to the office of personal representative of a deceased person:

The word "lunatic" shall mean any person who shall have been found to be a lunatic upon a commission of inquiry in the nature of a writ de lunatico inquirendo:

The expression "person of unsound mind" shall mean any person not an infant, who, not having been found to be a lunatic, shall be incapable from infirmity of mind to manage his own affairs:

The word "devisee" shall, in addition to its ordinary signification, mean the heir of a devisee and the devisee of an heir, and generally any person claiming an interest in the lands of a deceased person, not as heir of such deceased person, but by a title dependent solely upon the operation of the laws concerning devise and descent:

The word "mortgage" shall be applicable to every estate, interest, or property in lands or personal estate which would in a court of equity be deemed merely a security for money:

The word "person" used and referred to in the masculine gender shall include a female as well as a male, and shall include a body corporate:

And generally, unless the contrary shall appear from the context, every word importing the singular number only shall extend to several persons or things, and every word importing the plural number shall apply to one person or thing, and every word importing the masculine gender only shall extend to a female.

3. That when any lunatic or person of unsound mind shall be seised or possessed of any lands upon any trust or by way of mortgage, it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, intrusted by virtue of the Queen's sign manual with the care of the persons and estates of lunatics, to make an order that such lands be vested in such person or persons in such manner and for such estate as he shall direct; and the order shall have the same effect as if the trustee or mortgagee had been sane, and had duly executed a conveyance or assignment of the lands in the same manner for the same estate.

4. That when any lunatic or person of unsound mind shall be entitled to any contingent right in any lands upon any trust or by way of mortgage, it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, to make an order wholly releasing such lands from such contingent right, or disposing of the same to such person or persons as the said Lord Chancellor shall direct; and the order shall have the same effect as if the trustee or mortgagee had been sane, and had duly executed a deed so releasing or disposing of the contingent right.

5. That when any lunatic or person of unsound mind shall be solely entitled to any stock or to any chose in action upon any trust or by way of mortgage, it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, to make an order vesting in any person or persons the right to transfer such stock, or to receive the dividends or income thereof, or to sue for and recover such chose in action, or any interest in respect thereof; and when any person or persons shall be entitled jointly with any lunatic or person of unsound mind to any stock or chose in action upon any trust or by way of mortgage, it shall be lawful for the said Lord Chancellor to make an order vesting the right to transfer such stock, or to receive the dividends or income thereof, or to sue for and recover such chose in action, or any interest in respect thereof, either in such person or persons so jointly entitled as aforesaid, or

In such last-mentioned person or persons together with any any other person or persons the said Lord Chancellor may appoint.

6. That when any stock shall be standing in the name of any deceased person whose personal representative is a lunatic or person of unsound mind, or when any chose in action shall be vested in any lunatic or person of unsound mind as the personal representative of a deceased person, it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, to make an order vesting the right to transfer such stock, or to receive the dividends or income thereof, or to sue for and recover such chose in action or any interest in respect thereof, in any person or persons he may appoint.

7. That where any infant shall be seised or possessed of any lands upon any trust or by way of mortgage, it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery to make an order vesting such lands in such person or persons in such manner and for such estate as the said Court shall direct; and the order shall have the same effect as if the infant trustee or mortgagee had been twenty-one years of age, and had duly executed a conveyance or assignment of the lands in the same manner for the same estate.

8. That where any infant shall be entitled to any contingent right in any lands upon any trust or by way of mortgage, it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery to make an order wholly releasing such lands from such contingent right, or disposing of the same to such person or persons as the said Court shall direct; and the order shall have the same effect as if the infant had been twenty-one years of age, and had duly executed a deed so releasing or disposing of the contingent right.

9. That when any person solely seised or possessed of any lands upon any trust shall be out of the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery, or cannot be found, it shall be lawful for the said Court to make an order vesting such lands in such person or persons in such manner and for such estate as the said Court shall direct; and the order shall have the same effect as if the trustee had duly executed a conveyance or assignment of the lands in the same manner and for the same estate.

10. That when any person or persons shall be seised or possessed of any lands jointly with a person out of the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery, or who cannot be found, it shall be lawful for the said Court to make an order vesting the lands in the person or persons so jointly seised or possessed, or in such last-mentioned person or persons together with any other person or persons, in such manner and for such estate as the said Court shall direct; and the order shall have the same effect as if the trustee out of the jurisdiction, or who cannot be found, had duly executed a conveyance or assignment of the lands in the same manner for the same estate.

11. That when any person solely entitled to a contingent right in any lands upon any trust shall be out of the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery, or cannot be found, it shall be lawful for the said Court to make an order wholly releasing such lands from such contingent right, or disposing of the same to such person or persons as the said Court shall direct; and the order shall have the same effect as if the trustee had duly executed a conveyance so releasing or disposing of the contingent right.

12. That when any person jointly entitled with any other person or persons to a contingent right in any lands upon any trust shall be out of the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery, or cannot be found, it shall be lawful for the said Court to make an order disposing of the contingent right of the person out of the jurisdiction, or who cannot be found, to the person or persons so jointly entitled as aforesaid, or to such last-mentioned person or persons together with any other person or persons; and the order shall have the same effect as if the trustee out of the jurisdiction, or who cannot be found, had duly executed a conveyance so releasing or disposing of the contingent right.

13. That where there shall have been two or more persons jointly seised or possessed of any lands upon any trust, and it shall be uncertain which of such trustees was the survivor, it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery to make an order vesting such lands in such person or persons in such manner and for such estate as the said Court shall direct; and the order shall have the same effect as if the survivor of such trustees had duly executed a conveyance or assignment of the lands in the same manner for the same estate.

14. That where any one or more person or persons shall have been seised or possessed of any lands upon any trust, and it shall not be known, as to the trustee last known to have been seised or possessed, whether he be living or dead, it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery to make an order vesting such lands in such person or persons in such manner and for such estate as the said Court shall direct; and the order shall have the same effect as if the last trustee had duly executed a conveyance or assignment of the lands in the same manner for the same estate.

15. That when any person seised of any lands upon any trust shall have died intestate as to such lands without an heir, or shall have died and it shall not be known who is his heir or devisee, it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery to make an order vesting such lands in such person or persons in such manner and for such estate as the said Court shall direct; and the order shall have the same effect as if the heir or devisee of such trustee had duly executed a conveyance of the lands in the same manner for the same estate.

16. That when any lands are subject to a contingent right in an unborn person or class of unborn persons who upon coming into existence would in respect thereof become seised or possessed of such lands upon any trust, it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery to make an order which shall wholly release and discharge such lands from such contingent right in such unborn person or class of unborn persons, or to make an order which shall vest in any person or persons the estate or estates which such unborn person or class of unborn persons would upon coming into existence be seised or possessed of in such lands.

17. That where any person jointly or solely seised or possessed of any lands upon any trust shall, after a demand by a person entitled to require a conveyance or assignment of such lands, or a duly authorised agent of such last-mentioned person, have stated in writing that he will not convey or assign the same, or shall neglect or refuse to convey or assign such lands for the space of twenty-eight days next after a proper deed for conveying or assigning the same shall have been tendered to him by any person entitled to require the same, or by a duly authorised agent of such last-mentioned person, it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery to make an order vesting such lands in such person or persons in such manner and for such estate as the said Court shall direct; and the order shall have the same effect as if the trustee had duly executed a conveyance or assignment of the lands in the same manner for the same estate.

18. That where any person jointly or solely entitled to a contingent right in any lands upon any trust shall, after a demand for a conveyance or release of such contingent right by a person entitled to require the same, or a duly authorised agent of such last-mentioned person, have stated in writing that he will not convey or release such contingent right, or shall neglect or refuse to convey or release such contingent right for the space of twenty-eight days next after a proper deed for conveying or releasing the same shall have been tendered to him by any person entitled to require the same, or by a duly authorised agent of such last-mentioned person, it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery to make an order releasing or disposing of such contingent right in such manner as it shall direct; and the order shall have the same effect as if the trustee so neglecting or refusing had duly executed a conveyance so releasing or disposing of the contingent right.

19. That when any person to whom any lands have been conveyed by way of mortgage shall have died without having entered into the possession or into the receipt of the rents and profits thereof, and the money due in respect of such mortgage shall have been paid to a person entitled to receive the same, or such last-mentioned person shall consent to an order for the reconveyance of such lands, then in any of the following cases it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery to make an order vesting such lands in such person or persons in such manner and for such estate as the said Court shall direct; that is to say—

When an heir or devisee of such mortgagee shall be out of the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery, or cannot be found;

When an heir or devisee of such mortgagee shall, upon a demand by a person entitled to require a conveyance of such lands or a duly authorised agent of such last-mentioned person, have stated in writing that he will not convey the same, or shall not convey the same for the space of twenty-eight days next after a proper deed for conveying such lands shall have been tendered to him by a person entitled aforesaid, or a duly authorised agent of such last-mentioned person :

When it shall be uncertain which of several devisees of such mortgagee was the survivor :

When it shall be uncertain as to the survivor of several devisees of such mortgages, or as to the heir of such mortgagee, whether he be living or dead :

When such mortgagee shall have died intestate as to such lands, and without an heir, or shall have died and it shall not be known who is his heir or devisee :

And the order of the said Court of Chancery made in any one of the foregoing cases shall have the same effect as if the heir or devisee or surviving devisee, as the case may be, had duly executed a conveyance or assignment of the lands in the same manner and for the same estate.

20. That in every case where the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, or the Court of Chancery, shall, under the provisions of this act, be enabled to make an order having the effect of a conveyance or assignment of any lands, or having the effect of a release or disposition of the contingent right of any person or persons, born or unborn, it shall also be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, or the Court of Chancery, as the case may be, should it be deemed more convenient, to make an order appointing a person to convey or assign such lands, or release or dispose of such contingent right; and the conveyance or assignment, or release or disposition, of the person so appointed, shall, when in conformity with the terms of the order by which he is appointed, have the same effect, in conveying or assigning the lands, or releasing or disposing of the contingent right, as an order of the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, or the Court of Chancery, would in the particular case have had under the provisions of this act; and in every case where the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, or the Court of Chancery, shall, under the provisions of this act, be enabled to make an order vesting in any person or persons the right to transfer any stock transferable in the books of the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, or of any other company or society established or to be established, it shall also be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, or the Court of Chancery, if it be deemed more convenient, to make an order directing the secretary, deputy secretary, or accountant-general for the time being of the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, or any officer of such other company or society, at once to transfer or join in transferring the stock to the person or persons to be named in the order; and this act shall be a full and complete indemnity and discharge to the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, and all other companies or societies, and their officers and servants, for all acts done or permitted to be done pursuant thereto.

21. That as to any lands situated within the duchy of Lancaster or the counties palatine of Lancaster or Durham, it shall be lawful for the Court of the Duchy Chamber of Lancaster, the Court of Chancery in the county palatine of Lancaster, or the Court of Chancery in the county palatine of Durham, to make a like order in the same cases as to any lands within the jurisdiction of the same Courts respectively as the Court of Chancery has, under the provisions hereinbefore contained, been enabled to make concerning any lands; and every such order of the Court of the Duchy Chamber of Lancaster, the Court of Chancery in the county palatine of Lancaster, or the Court of Chancery in the county palatine of Durham, shall, as to such lands, have the same effect as an order of the Court of Chancery: provided always, that no person who is anywhere within the limits of the jurisdiction of the High Court of Chancery shall be deemed by such local courts to be an absent trustee or mortgagee within the meaning of this act.

22. That when any person or persons shall be jointly entitled with any person out of the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery, or who cannot be found, or concerning whom it shall be uncertain whether he be living or dead, to any stock or chose in action upon any trust, it shall be lawful for the said Court to make an order vesting the right to transfer such stock, or to receive the dividends or income thereof, or to sue for or recover such chose in action, or any interest in respect thereof, either in such person or persons so jointly entitled as aforesaid, or in such last-mentioned person or persons together with any person or persons the said Court may appoint; and when any sole trustee of any stock or chose in action shall be out of the jurisdiction of the said Court, or cannot be found, or it shall be uncertain whether he be living or dead, it shall be lawful for the said Court to make an order vesting the right to transfer such stock, or to receive the dividends or income thereof, or to sue for and recover such chose in action, or any interest in respect thereof, in any person or persons the said Court may appoint.

23. That where any sole trustee of any stock or chose in action shall neglect or refuse to transfer such stock, or to receive the dividends or income thereof, or to sue for or recover such chose in action, or any interest in respect thereof, according to the direction of the person absolutely entitled thereto, for the space of twenty-eight days next after a request in writing for that purpose shall have been made to him by the person absolutely entitled thereto, it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery to make an order vesting the sole right to transfer such stock, or to receive the dividends or income thereof, or to sue for and recover such chose in action, or any interest in respect thereof, in such person or persons as the said Court may appoint.

24. That where any one of the trustees of any stock or chose in action shall neglect or refuse to transfer such stock, or to receive the dividends or income thereof, or to sue for or recover such chose in action according to the directions of the person absolutely entitled thereto, for the space of twenty-eight days next after a request in writing for that purpose shall have been made to him or her by such person, it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery to make an order vesting the right to transfer such stock, or to receive the dividends or income thereof, or to sue for and recover such chose in action, in the other trustee or trustees of the said stock or chose in action, or in any person or persons whom the said Court may appoint jointly with such other trustee or trustees.

25. That when any stock shall be standing in the sole name of a deceased person, and his or her personal representative shall be out of the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery, or cannot be found, or it shall be uncertain whether such personal representative be living or dead, or such personal representative shall neglect or refuse to transfer such stock, or receive the dividends or income thereof, according to the direction of the person absolutely entitled thereto, for the space of twenty-eight days next after a request in writing for that purpose shall have been made to him by the person entitled as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery to make an order vesting the right to transfer such stock, or to receive the dividends or income thereof, in any person or persons whom the said Court may appoint.

26. That where any order shall have been made under any of the provisions of this act vesting the right to any stock in any person or persons appointed by the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, or the Court of Chancery, such legal right shall vest accordingly, and thereupon the person or persons so appointed are hereby authorised and empowered to execute all deeds and powers of attorney, and to perform all acts relating to the transfer of such stock into his or their own name or names or otherwise, or relating to the receipt of the dividends thereof, to the extent and in conformity with the terms of such order; and the Bank of England, and all companies and associations whatever, and all persons, shall be equally bound and compellable to comply with the requisitions of such person or persons so appointed as aforesaid, to the extent and in conformity with the terms of such order as the said Bank of England, or such companies, associations, or persons, would have been bound and compellable to comply with the requisitions of the person in whose place such appointment shall have been made, and shall be equally indemnified in complying with the requisition of such person or persons so appointed as they would have been indemnified in complying with the requisition of the person in whose place such appointment shall have been made; and after notice in writing of any such order of the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, or of the Court of Chancery, concerning any stock, shall have been given, it shall not be lawful for the Bank of England, or any company or association whatever, or any person having received such notice, to act upon the requisition of the person in whose place an appointment shall have been made in any matter whatever relating to the transfer of such stock, or the payment of the dividends or produce thereof.

27. That where any order shall have been made under the provisions of this act, either by the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, or by the Court of Chancery, vesting the legal right to sue for or recover any chose in action or any interest in respect thereof in any person or persons, such legal right shall vest accordingly, and thereupon it shall be lawful for the person or persons so appointed to carry on, commence, and prosecute, in his or their own name or names, any action, suit, or other proceeding at law or in equity for the recovery of such chose in action, in the same manner in all respects as the person in whose place an appointment shall have been made could have sued for or recovered such chose in action.

28. That whensoever, under any of the provisions of this act, an order shall be made, either by the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, or the Court of Chancery, vesting any copyhold or customary lands in any person or persons, and such order shall be made with the consent of the lord or lady of the manor whereof such lands are holden, then the lands shall, without any surrender or admittance in respect thereof, vest accordingly; and whenever, under any of the provisions of this act, an order shall be made either by the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, or the Court of Chancery, appointing any person or persons to convey or assign any copyhold or customary lands, it shall be lawful for such person or persons to do all acts and execute all instruments for the purpose of completing the assurance of such lands; and all such acts and instruments so done and executed shall have the same effect, and every lord and lady of a manor, and every other person, shall, subject to the customs of the manor and the usual payments, be equally bound and compellable to make admittance to such lands, and to do all other acts for the purpose of completing the assurance thereof, as if the persons in whose place an appointment shall have been made, being free from any disability, had duly done and executed such acts and instruments.

29. That when a decree shall have been made by any Court of equity directing the sale of any lands for the payment of the debts of a deceased person, every person seised or possessed of such lands, or entitled to a contingent right therein, as heir, or under the will of such deceased debtor, shall be deemed to be so seised or possessed or entitled, as the case may be, upon a trust within the meaning of this act; and the Court of Chancery is hereby empowered to make an order wholly discharging the contingent right, under the will of such deceased debtor, of any unborn person.

30. That where any decree shall be made by any Court of equity for the specific performance of a contract concerning any lands, or for the partition or exchange of any lands, or generally when any decree shall be made for the conveyance or assignment of any lands, either in cases arising out of the doctrine of election or otherwise, it shall be lawful for the said Court to declare that any of the parties to the said suit wherein such decree is made are trustees of such lands or any part thereof, within the meaning of this act, or to declare concerning the interests of unborn persons who might claim under any party to the said suit, or under the will or voluntary settlement of any person deceased who was during his lifetime a party to the contract or transactions concerning which such decree is made, that such interests of unborn persons are the interests of persons who, upon coming into existence, would be trustees within the meaning of this act, and thereupon it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, or the Court of Chancery, as the case may be, to make such order or orders as to the estates, rights, and interests of such persons, born or unborn, as the said Court or the said Lord Chancellor might under the provisions of this act make concerning the estates, rights, and interests of trustees born or unborn.

31. That it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, or the Court of Chancery, to make declarations and give directions concerning the manner in which the right to any stock or chose in action vested under the provisions of this act shall be exercised; and thereupon the person or persons in whom such right shall be vested shall be compellable to obey such directions and declarations by the same process as that by which other orders under this act are enforced.

32. That whenever it shall be expedient to appoint a new trustee or new trustees, and it shall be found inexpedient, difficult, or impracticable so to do without the assistance of the Court of Chancery, it shall be lawful for the said Court of Chancery to make an order appointing a new trustee or new trustees either in substitution for or in addition to any existing trustee or trustees.

33. That the person or persons who, upon the making of such order as last aforesaid, shall be trustee or trustees, shall have all the same rights and powers as he or they would have had if appointed by decree in a suit duly instituted.

34. That it shall be lawful for the said Court of Chancery, upon making any order for appointing a new trustee or new trustees, either by the same or by any subsequent order, to direct that any lands subject to the trust shall vest in the person or persons who upon the appointment shall be the trustee or trustees, for such estate as the Court shall direct; and such order shall have the same effect as if the person or persons who before such order were the trustee or trustees (if any) had duly executed all proper conveyances and assignments of such lands for such estate.

35. That it shall be lawful for the said Court of Chancery, upon making any order for appointing a new trustee or new trustees, either by the same or by any subsequent order, to vest the right to call for a transfer of any stock subject to the trust, or to receive the dividends or income thereof, or to sue for or recover any chose in action, subject to the trust, or any interest in respect thereof, in the person or persons who upon the appointment shall be the trustee or trustees.

36. That any such appointment by the Court of new trustees, and any such conveyance, assignment, or transfer as aforesaid, shall operate no further or otherwise as a discharge to any former or continuing trustee than an appointment of new trustees under any power for that purpose contained in any instrument would have done.

37. That an order, under any of the hereinbefore contained provisions, for the appointment of a new trustee or trustees, or concerning any lands, stock, or chose in action subject to a trust, may be made upon the application of any person beneficially interested in such lands, stock, or chose in action, whether under disability or not, or upon the application of any person duly appointed as a trustee thereof; and that an order under any of the provisions hereinbefore contained concerning any lands, stock, or chose in action subject to a mortgage may be made on the application of any person beneficially interested in the equity of redemption, whether under disability or not, or of any person interested in the monies secured by such mortgage.

38. That when any person shall deem himself entitled to an order under any of the provisions hereinbefore contained, either from the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, or from the Court of Chancery, it shall be lawful for him to exhibit before any one of the Masters of the High Court of Chancery a statement of the facts whereon such order is sought to be obtained, and adduce evidence in support thereof; and if such evidence shall be satisfactory to the said Master, he shall, at the request of the person adducing such evidence, give a certificate under his hand of the several material facts found by him to be true, and of his opinion that such person is entitled to an order in the form set forth in such certificate.

39. That any person who shall have obtained such certificate may apply by motion to the Court of Chancery, or to the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, for an order to the effect set forth in such certificate, or for such other order as such person may deem himself entitled to upon the facts found by the Master.

40. That any person or persons entitled in manner aforesaid to apply for an order from the said Court of Chancery, or from the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, may, should he so think fit, present a petition in the first instance to the Court of Chancery, or to the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, for such order as he may deem himself entitled to, and may give evidence by affidavit or otherwise in support of such petition before the said Court, or the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, and may serve such person or persons with notice of such petition as he may deem entitled to service thereof.

41. That upon the hearing of any such motion or petition it shall be lawful for the said Court or for the said Lord Chancellor, should it be deemed necessary, to direct a reference to one of the Masters in Ordinary of the Court of Chancery to inquire into any facts which require such an investigation, or it shall be lawful for the said Court or for the said Lord Chancellor to direct such motion or petition to stand over, to enable the petitioner or petitioners to adduce evidence or further evidence before the said Court or before the said Lord Chancellor, or to enable notice or any further notice of such motion or petition to be served upon any person or persons.

42. That upon the hearing of any such motion or petition, whether any certificate or report from a Master shall have been obtained or not, it shall be lawful for the Court, or the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, to dismiss such motion or petition, with or without costs, or to make an order thereupon in conformity with the provisions of this act.

43. That whensoever in any cause or matter, either by the evidence adduced therein, or by the admissions of the parties, or by a report of one of the Masters of the Court of Chancery, the facts necessary for an order under this act shall appear to such Court to be sufficiently proved, it shall be lawful for the said Court, either upon the hearing of the said cause or of any petition or motion in the said cause or matter, to make such order under this act.

44. That whenever any order shall be made under this act, either by the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, or by the Court of Chancery, for the purpose of conveying or assigning any lands, or for the purpose of releasing or disposing of any contingent right, and such order shall be founded on an allegation of the personal incapacity of a trustee or mortgagee, or on an allegation that a trustee or the heir or devisee of a mortgagee is out of the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery or cannot be found, or that it is uncertain which of several trustees, or which of several devisees of a mortgagee, was the survivor, or whether the last trustee, or the heir or last surviving devisee of a mortgagee, be living or dead, or on an allegation that any trustee or mortgagee has died intestate without an heir, or has died and it is not known who is his heir or devisee, then in any of such cases the fact that the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, or the Court of Chancery, has made an order upon such an allegation, shall be conclusive evidence of the matter so alleged in any court of law or equity upon any question as to the legal validity of the order: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall prevent the Court of Chancery directing a re-conveyance or re-assignment of any lands conveyed or assigned by any order under the act, or a re-disposition of any contingent right conveyed or disposed of by such order; and it shall be lawful for the said Court to direct any of the parties to any suit concerning such lands or contingent right to pay any costs occasioned by the order under this act, when the same shall appear to have been improperly obtained.

45. That it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, or the Court of Chancery, to exercise the powers herein conferred for the purpose of vesting any lands, stock, or chose in action in the trustee or trustees of any charity or society over which charity or society the said Court of Chancery would have jurisdiction upon suit duly instituted, whether such trustee or trustees shall have been duly appointed by any power contained in any deed or instrument, or by the decree of the said Court of Chancery, or by order made upon a petition to the said Court under any statute authorising the said Court to make an order to that effect in a summary way upon petition.

46. That no lands, stock, or chose in action vested in any person upon any trust or by way of mortgage, or any profits thereof, shall escheat or be forfeited to her Majesty, her heirs or successors, or to any corporation, lord or lady of a manor, or other person, by reason of the attainder or conviction for any offence of such trustee or mortgagee, but shall remain in such trustee or mortgagee, or survive to his or her co-trustee, or descend or vest in his or her representative, as if no such attainder or conviction had taken place.

47. That nothing contained in this act shall prevent the escheat or forfeiture of any lands or personal estate vested in any such trustee or mortgagee, so far as relates to any beneficial interest therein of any such trustee or mortgagee, but such lands or personal estate, so far as relates to any such beneficial interest, shall be recoverable in the same manner as if this act had not passed.

48. That where any infant or person of unsound mind shall be entitled to any money payable in discharge of any lands, stock, or chose in action conveyed, assigned, or transferred under this act, it shall be lawful for the person by whom such money is payable to pay the same into the Bank of England, in the name and with the privity of the Accountant-General, in trust in any cause then depending concerning such money, or, if there shall be no such cause, to the credit of such infant or person of unsound mind, subject to the order or disposition of the said Court; and it shall be lawful for the said Court, upon petition in a summary way, to order any money so paid to be invested in the public funds, and to order payment or distribution thereof, or payment of the dividends thereof, as to the said Court shall seem reasonable; and every cashier of the Bank of England who shall receive any such money is hereby required to give to the person paying the same a receipt for such money, and such receipt shall be an effectual discharge for the money therein respectively expressed to have been received.

49. That where in any suit commenced or to be commenced in the Court of Chancery it shall be made to appear to the Court by affidavit that diligent search and inquiry has been made after any person made a defendant, who is only a trustee, to serve him with the process of the Court, and that he cannot be found, it shall be lawful for the said Court to hear and determine such cause, and to make such absolute decree therein against every person who shall appear to them to be only a trustee, and not otherwise concerned in interest in the matter in question, in such and the same manner as if such trustee had been duly served with the process of the Court, and had appeared and filed his answer thereto, and had also appeared by his counsel and solicitor at the hearing of such cause: provided always, that no such decree shall bind, affect, or in anywise prejudice any person against whom the same shall be made, without service of process upon him as aforesaid, his heirs, executors, or administrators, for or in respect of any estate, right, or interest which such person shall have at the time of making such decree for his own use or benefit, or otherwise than as a trustee as aforesaid.

50. That when any person shall, under the provisions of this act, apply to one of the Masters of the Court of Chancery in the first instance, and adduce evidence, for the purpose of obtaining the certificate of such Master as a foundation for an order of the said Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, or the said Court of Chancery, it shall be lawful for the said Master to order service of such application upon any person, or to dismiss such application, and to direct that the costs of any persons consequent thereon shall be paid by the person making the same; and all orders of the Master under this act shall be enforced by the same process as orders of the Court made in any suit against a party thereto.

51. That the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, and the Court of Chancery, may order the costs and expenses of and relating to the petitions, orders, directions, conveyances, assignments, and transfers to be made in pursuance of this act, or any of them, to be paid and raised out of or from the lands or personal estate, or the rents or produce thereof, in respect of which the same respectively shall be made, or in such manner as the said Lord Chancellor or Court shall think proper.

52. That upon any petition being presented under this act to the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, concerning a person of unsound mind, it shall be lawful for the said Lord Chancellor, should he so think fit, to direct that a commission in the nature of a writ de lunatico inquirendo shall issue concerning such person, and to postpone making any order upon such petition until a return shall have been made to such commission.

53. That upon any petition under this act being presented to the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, or to the Court of Chancery, it shall be lawful for the said Lord Chancellor or the said Court of Chancery to postpone making any order upon such petition until the right of the petitioner or petitioners shall have been declared in a suit duly instituted for that purpose.

54. That the powers and authorities given by this act to the Court of Chancery in England shall extend to all lands and personal estate within the dominions, plantations, and colonies belonging to her Majesty, (except Scotland).

55. That the powers and authorities given by this act to the Court of Chancery in England shall and may be exercised in like manner, and are hereby given and extended to the Court of Chancery in Ireland with respect to all lands and personal estate in Ireland.

56. That the powers and authorities given by this act to the Lord Chancellor of Great Britain, intrusted as aforesaid, shall extend to all lands and personal estate within any of the dominions, plantations, and colonies belonging to her Majesty, (except Scotland and Ireland).

57. That the powers and authorities given by this act to the Lord Chancellor of Great Britain, intrusted as aforesaid, shall and may be exercised in like manner by and are hereby given to the Lord Chancellor of Ireland, intrusted as aforesaid, with respect to all lands and personal estate in Ireland.

58. That in citing this act in other acts of Parliament, and in legal instruments and in legal proceedings, it shall be sufficient to use the expression "The Trustee Act, 1850."

59. That this act shall come into operation on the 1st day of November, 1850.

60. That this act may be amended or repealed by any act to be passed in this session of Parliament.

CAP. LXI.

An Act to extend the Act for the more easy Recovery of Small Debts and Demands in England, and to amend the same.
[14th August, 1850.]

 25. Act may be amended or repealed.

Whereas by an act passed in the 9 & 10 Vict., [c. 95,] intituled "An Act for the more easy Recovery of Small Debts and Demands in England," jurisdiction is given to the courts holden under the said act for the recovery of certain debts, damages, and demands therein mentioned not exceeding 20l.; and whereas it is expedient to extend the provisions of the said act, and also of a certain other act passed in the 12 & 13 Vict., [c. 101,] intituled "An Act to amend the Act for the more easy Recovery of Small Debts and Demands in England, and to abolish certain Inferior Courts of Record," to debts, damages, and demands not exceeding the sum of 50l., and to alter and amend the said first-mentioned act in manner hereinafter mentioned: be it therefore enacted, &c., that the jurisdiction of the several courts holden or to be holden under the said act of the tenth year of her Majesty shall extend to the recovery of any debt, damage, or demand not exceeding the sum of 50l., and to all actions in respect thereof (save and except the several actions specified in the proviso in sect. 38 of the same act); and that the several powers and provisions of the said several acts of the tenth and thirteenth years of her Majesty, and all rules, orders, and regulations which have been or may be made in pursuance of the said acts or either of them, shall extend to all debts, damages, and demands which may be sued for in the said courts or any of them not exceeding the sum of 50l., and to all proceedings and judgments for the recovery of the same, or otherwise in relation thereto respectively, as fully and effectually, to all intents and purposes, as the same respectively are now or may be applicable to debts, damages, and demands within the present jurisdiction of the said courts.

2. That this act and the said recited acts of the 9 & 10 Vict., [c. 95,] and the 12 & 13 Vict., [c. 101,] shall be read and construed as one act, as if the several provisions in the said recited acts contained, not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, were repeated and re-enacted in this act.

3. That no deputy judge of any such county court, save and except the Westminster County Court of Middlesex, shall, during the time he acts or shall be entitled to act as such deputy, practise as a barrister in any court within the district for which he acts or shall be entitled to act as such deputy; and that every clerk and assistant clerk appointed after the passing of this act to any of such courts shall reside within the district of the court or courts for which he shall have been appointed.

4. That so much of the said act of the tenth year of her Majesty as relates to the removal of clerks or high bailiffs of the courts holden under the said act shall be repealed; and it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, or, where the whole of the district of the court or courts for which the clerk or high bailiff shall have been appointed is within the duchy of Lancaster, for the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, when such Lord Chancellor or Chancellor of the Duchy shall in his discretion think fit, to remove the clerk, high bailiff, or any assistant clerk of any such court or courts from his office, and from time to time to make such order as to the attendance of any clerk, deputy clerk, or assistant clerk, during the sitting of the court or otherwise, as he shall think fit: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall affect the tenure of office of any person who before the passing of the said act held an office in any of the courts mentioned in Schedule (A.) annexed to the said act.

5. That there shall be payable on every proceeding in the courts holden under the said act of the tenth year of her Majesty, to the judges, clerks, and high bailiffs of the several courts, in every case where the sum sought to be recovered shall exceed 20l., such fee as are set down in the Schedule marked (D.) to the said act of the tenth year of her Majesty annexed as fees payable upon demands exceeding the sum of 10l.; and the fees on every proceeding shall be paid in the first instance by the plaintiff or party on whose behalf such proceeding is to be had on or before such proceeding, and in default payment thereof shall be enforced by order of the judge by such ways and means as any debt or damage ordered to be paid by the court can be recovered; and the fees upon executions shall be paid into court at the time of the issue of the warrant of execution, and shall be paid by the clerk of the court to the bailiff upon the return of the warrant of execution, and not before: provided always, that it shall be lawful for one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, with the consent of the commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, from time to time to regulate or vary, lessen or increase, the fees payable under this act or the said recited acts, or either of them, in such manner as to him shall seem fit: provided also, that all sums payable in the name of fees to such officers of the court as shall be paid by salaries shall be paid from time to time to the treasurer of the court, and shall be applied by such treasurer in the manner provided by the said act of the tenth year of her Majesty.

6. That the fees to be taken by barristers-at-law and attorneys practising in the said courts, in cases brought within the jurisdiction given by this act, shall be as follows; an attorney shall be entitled to have or recover a sum not exceeding 1*l.* 10*s.* for his fees and costs, where the debt, damage, or demand claimed in any plaint in covenant, debt, detinue, or assumpsit shall not exceed 35*l.*, or 2*l.* in any other case, within the jurisdiction given by this act; and in no case shall any fee exceeding 2*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.* be allowed for employing a barrister as counsel in the cause; and the expense of employing a barrister or an attorney, either by plaintiff or defendant, shall not be allowed on taxation of costs, unless by order of the judge; and the judges of the said courts respectively shall from time to time determine in what cases such expenses shall be so allowed.

7. That so much of the said act of the tenth year of her Majesty as enacts that it shall be lawful for her Majesty, with the advice of her Privy Council, to order that the judges, clerks, bailiffs, and officers of the courts holden under that act, or any of them, shall be paid by salaries instead of fees, or in any manner other than is provided by that act, shall be repealed; and that it shall be lawful for the commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, with the consent of one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, from time to time to order that the judges, clerks, bailiffs, and officers of the said courts, or any of them, shall be paid by salaries instead of fees, or in any manner other than is provided by the said act.

8. That any person against whom a plaint shall be entered in any county court may, if he think fit, whether he be summoned upon such plaint or not, in the presence of the clerk or assistant clerk of the court in which such plaint shall have been entered, or one of their clerks respectively, or in the presence of an attorney of one of the superior courts, sign a statement confessing and admitting the amount of the debt or demand or part of the amount of the debt or demand for which such plaint shall have been entered, and such clerk or assistant clerk shall, as soon as conveniently may be after receiving such statement, send notice thereof to the plaintiff, by the post or by causing the same to be delivered at his usual place of abode or business, and thereupon it shall not be necessary for the said plaintiff to prove the debt or demand so confessed and admitted as aforesaid, but the judge of such court, at the next sitting of such court, whether the parties or either of them attend such court or not, shall, upon proof by affidavit of the signature of the party, if such statement were not made in the presence of the clerk or assistant clerk, proceed to give judgment for the debt or demand so confessed and admitted, in the same manner, and subject to the same conditions, as if he had tried the cause, and given judgment thereupon, under the provisions of the said first-recited act.

9. That if the person against whom a plaint shall be entered in any county court can agree with the person on whose behalf such plaint shall have been entered upon the amount of the debt or demand in respect of which such plaint shall have been entered, and upon the terms and conditions upon which the same shall be paid or satisfied, it shall be lawful for such persons respectively, in the presence of the clerk or assistant clerk of the court in which such plaint shall have been entered, or one of their clerks respectively, or in the presence of an attorney of one of the superior courts, to sign a statement of the amount of the debt or demand so agreed upon between such persons respectively, and of the terms and conditions upon which the same shall be paid or satisfied, such clerk or assistant clerk shall receive such statement, and shall thereupon, upon proof by affidavit of the signature of the party, if such statement were not made in the presence of the clerk or assistant clerk, enter up judgment for the plaintiff for the amount of the debt or demand so agreed on, and upon the terms and conditions mentioned in such statement; and such judgment shall to all intents and purposes be the same, and have the same effect, and shall be enforced and enforceable in the same manner, as if it had been a judgment of the judge of the said court.

10. That in every case where the plaintiff shall not appear, either by himself or his attorney, upon the day of the return of any summons for hearing, or at any continuation or adjournment of the said hearing, and the defendant shall appear either by himself or his attorney upon such day of hearing, continuation, or adjournment, it shall be lawful for the judge to award to the defendant or to his attorney, by way of costs of his attendance and satisfaction for his trouble, such sum as the judge in his discretion shall think fit; and the sum so awarded shall be recoverable from the plaintiff by such ways and means as any debt or damage ordered to be paid by the same court can be recovered.

11. That if in any action commenced after the passing of this act in any of her Majesty's superior courts of record, in covenant, debt, detinue, or assumpsit, not being an action for breach of promise of marriage, the plaintiff shall recover a sum not exceeding 20*l.*, or if, in any action commenced after the passing of this act in any of her Majesty's superior courts of record, in trespass, trover, or case, not being an action for malicious prosecution, or for libel, or for slander, or for criminal conversation, or for seduction, the plaintiff shall recover a sum not exceeding 5*l.*, the plaintiff shall have judgment to recover such sum only, and no costs, except in the cases hereinafter provided, and except in the case of a judgment by default; and it shall not be necessary to enter any suggestion on the record to deprive such plaintiff of costs, nor shall any such plaintiff be entitled to costs by reason of any privilege as attorney or officer of such court or otherwise.

12. Provided always, and be it enacted, that if the plaintiff shall in any such action as aforesaid recover a sum less than the sum in that behalf hereinbefore mentioned, by verdict, and the judge or other presiding officer before whom such verdict shall be obtained shall certify on the back of the record that it appeared to him at the trial that the cause of action was one for which a plaint could not have been entered in any such county court as aforesaid, or that it appeared to him at the trial that there was a sufficient reason for bringing the said action in the court in which the said action was brought, the plaintiff in such case shall have the same judgment to recover his costs that he would have had if this act had not been passed.

13. Provided also, and be it enacted, that if in any such action, whether there be a verdict in such action or not, the plaintiff shall make it appear to the satisfaction of the court in which such action was brought, or to the satisfaction of a judge at chambers upon summons, that the said action was brought for a cause in which concurrent jurisdiction is given to the superior courts by the 128th section of the said recited act of the tenth year of her Majesty, or for which no plaint could have been entered in any such county court, or that the said cause was removed from a county court by certiorari, then and in any of such cases the court in which the said action is brought, or the said judge at chambers, may thereupon, by rule or order, direct that the plaintiff shall recover his costs, and thereupon the plaintiff shall have the same judgment to recover his costs that he would have had if this act had not been passed.

14. That if either party in any cause of the amount to which jurisdiction is given to the county courts by this act shall be dissatisfied with the determination or direction of the said court in point of law, or upon the admission or rejection of any evidence, such party may appeal from the same to any of the superior courts of common law at Westminster, two or more of the puisne judges whereof shall sit out of term as a court of appeal for that purpose, provided that such party shall, within ten days after such determination or direction, give notice of such appeal to the other party, or his attorney, and also give security, to be approved by the clerk of the court, for the costs of the appeal, whatever be the event of the appeal, and for the amount of the judgment, if he be the defendant and the appeal be dismissed; provided nevertheless, that such security, so far as regards the amount of the judgment, shall not be required in any case where the judge of the county court shall have ordered the party appealing to pay the amount of such judgment into the hands of the clerk of the county court in which such action shall have been tried, and the same shall have been paid accordingly; and the said court of appeal may either order a new trial on such terms as it thinks fit, or may order judgment to be entered for either party, as the case may be, and may make such order with respect to the costs of the said appeal as such court may think proper; and such orders shall be final.

15. That such appeal shall be in the form of a case agreed on by both parties, or their attorneys, and if they cannot agree, the judge of the county court, upon being applied to by them or their attorneys, shall settle the case and sign it; and such case shall be transmitted by the appellant to the rule department of the Master's office of the court in which the appeal is to be brought.

16. That no judgment, order, or determination given or made by any judge of a county court, nor any cause or matter brought before him or pending in his court, shall be removed by appeal, motion, writ of error, certiorari, or otherwise, into any other court whatever, save and except in the manner and according to the provisions hereinbefore mentioned.

17. That if both parties shall agree, by a memorandum signed by them or by their attorneys, that the county court shall have power to try any of the actions hereinbefore respectively mentioned in which the sum sought to be recovered shall exceed the sum of 5*l*. by the said recited act or 50*l*. by this act limited in the case of such actions respectively, or any action in which the title to land, whether of freehold, copyhold, leasehold, or other tenure, or to any tithe, toll, market, fair, or other franchise, shall be in question, then and in such case the said court shall have jurisdiction and power to try such action: provided always, that the said parties or their attorneys shall state in their said memorandum of agreement that they know such cause of action to be above the said sums respectively, or that they know such title to come in question in such action, and provided that such memorandum shall be filed with the clerk of the said court at the time of filing the demand of the plaintiff: provided also, that all local actions to be tried before any county court with the consent of the parties shall be brought and tried in that jurisdiction only in which the lands, tenements, or hereditaments or some part thereof are situate or in respect whereof such action shall be brought.

18. That if any party shall sue another in any county court for any debt or other cause of action for which he hath already sued him, and obtained judgment, in any other court, the proof of such former suit having been brought and judgment obtained may be given, and the party so suing shall not be entitled to recover in such second suit, and shall be adjudged to pay three times the costs of such second suit to the opposite party.

19. That from and after the passing of this act no action shall be brought against any high bailiff or bailiff, or against any person or persons acting by the order and in aid of any high bailiff, for anything done in obedience to any warrant under the hand of the clerk or clerks of the said court and the seal of the said court, until demand hath been made or left at the office of such high bailiff by the party or parties intending to bring such action, or by his, her, or their attorney or agent, in writing, signed by the party demanding the same, of the perusal and copy of such warrant, and the same hath been refused or neglected by the space of six days after such demand; and in case, after such demand and compliance therewith, by shewing the said warrant to and permitting a copy to be taken thereof by the party demanding the same, any action shall be brought against such high bailiff, bailiff, or other person or persons acting in his aid for any such cause as aforesaid, without making the clerk or clerks of the said court who signed or sealed the said warrant defendant or defendants, that on producing or proving such warrant at the trial of such action, the jury shall give their verdict for the defendant or defendants, notwithstanding any defect of jurisdiction or other irregularity in the said warrant; and if such action be brought jointly against such clerk or clerks, and also against such high bailiff or bailiff, or person or persons acting in his or their aid as aforesaid, then on proof of such warrant the jury shall find for such high bailiff or bailiff, and for such person or persons so acting as aforesaid, notwithstanding such defect or irregularity as aforesaid; and if the verdict shall be given against the said clerk or clerks, that in such case the plaintiff or plaintiffs shall recover his, her, or their costs against him or them, to be taxed in such manner by the proper officer as to include such costs as such plaintiff or plaintiffs are liable to pay to such defendant or defendants for whom such verdict shall be found as aforesaid; and if any action shall be brought the defendant or defendants shall and may plead the general issue, and give the special matter in evidence at any trial had thereupon.

20. And whereas by the said act passed in the 9 & 10 Vict. [c. 95.] intituled "An Act for the more easy Recovery of Small Debts and Demands in England," it is enacted, that in cases of rent being in arrear in respect of premises wherein goods may have been taken in execution under and by virtue of the said act, it should be lawful for the landlord, by writing to be delivered to the bailiff or officer making the levy, which writing should state the terms of holding and rent payable for the same, to claim any rent in arrear as therein mentioned: and whereas so much of the said enactment as requires that the claim of rent to be made by writing stating the terms of holding may lead to technical objections and unnecessary prolixity: and whereas also it is expedient to obviate certain difficulties which have arisen as to the landlord's right to priority of payment upon the construction of the said enactment: be it therefore enacted, that so much of the said act as requires that the said writing and claim should state the terms of holding shall be and is hereby repealed, and that it shall be a sufficient notice of claim, to entitle the landlord to all the benefit given to landlords under the said act, that such writing and claim shall state the amount of the rent claimed to be in arrear and unpaid, and the time for and in respect of which such rent is claimed to be due, in like manner as is now required by law in cases of ordinary distress for rent, and no further or otherwise; and also that no execution creditor under the said act or this act shall be satisfied his debt out of the proceeds of such execution and distress, or execution only where the tenant shall replevy, until the landlord who shall conform to the provisions of the said act as amended by this act shall have been paid the rent in arrear for the periods in the said act limited.

21. That the enactments contained in the said act, as altered and amended in this act, relating to the claims of landlords for rent in arrear where goods on the premises demised have been taken in execution, shall apply and extend to goods taken in execution under the authority of this act, in as full and beneficial a manner as if the same enactments were re-enacted in the like terms in this act.

22. That it shall be lawful for any judge of any of her Majesty's superior courts of common law at Westminster, as well in term time as in vacation, to hear and determine applications for writs of prohibition directed to the judges of the said county courts, and to make such rules or orders for the issuing of such writs as might have been made by the court, and all such rules or orders so made by any such judge shall have the same force and effect as rules of court for such purposes now have, and such writs shall be issued by virtue of such rules or orders as well in term time as in vacation: provided always, that any rule or order made by any such judge, or any writ issued by virtue thereof, may be discharged or varied or set aside by the court, on application made thereto by any party dissatisfied with such rule or order.

23. That all affidavits to be used in the courts holden under the said act of the tenth year of her Majesty shall and may be sworn before any judge of the said courts, or any Master Extraordinary in Chancery, or commissioner for taking affidavits in any of the superior courts of Westminster, or before a magistrate of the county, city, town, or place where any such affidavit may be sworn.

24. That in every town or place where there shall be a court holden under the provisions of the said act of the tenth year of her Majesty, the town-hall, court-house, or other public building belonging to any county, city, borough, or town shall be used for the purposes of holding the courts under the said act, without any charge for rent or other payment, save and except the reasonable and necessary charges for lighting, warming, and cleaning when such public building is used for the purpose of the courts, and for all other expenses necessarily incidental to the use of the said building for the purposes of the courts: provided always, that the necessary arrangements shall be made so that the sittings of the said courts shall not interfere with the business of the county, city, borough, or town usually transacted in such town-hall, court-house, or other public building, or with any purposes for which such town-hall, court-house, or other public building may be used by virtue of any local act in that behalf: provided also, that this enactment shall not apply to any city, borough, or town in which a building hath previously to the passing of this act been erected for the purposes of holding the courts under the said act and for the business connected with such courts, nor shall anything in this act contained be held, deemed, or taken to prejudice, affect, or otherwise interfere with any lease, contract, agreement, or engagement already entered into for the leasing, erection, hiring, or occupation of any building for the purposes of holding such courts therein and transacting therein the business relating to such courts.

25. That this act may be amended or repealed by any act to be passed in this session of Parliament.

THE METROPOLITAN COUNTY COURTS and SHERIFFS' COURT of LONDON.—The undersigned continues to devote his attention to County Court Business, and personally conducts and advocates the Cases of Suitors, as Agent to the Profession in all the above Courts. Experience has proved that County Court Business can be conducted with extraordinary facility and economy, when taken collectively and treated as a business distinct in itself, and that constant and extensive practice before the Judges of the various Courts, who differ upon many points, gives the regular practitioner great advantages over those whose attention is confined to their client's occasional cases. Great facilities and experience have been acquired by the undersigned in the conduct of several thousand cases; and very many of the most eminent houses in the Profession, as also the Solicitors to the several London Societies for the Protection of Trade, who confide all their subscribers' cases to his care, will gladly testify to the satisfaction he has afforded them.

LONDON, OCTOBER 12, 1850.

It is wonderful, that, with such constantly recurring instances of the mischief caused by vagueness of language in statutes, it should still continue to be the practice of the Legislature to use, even in the best drawn statutes, language studiously vague, when to use precise and unmistakeable language would have been perfectly easy. A very recent case, under the Wills Act, (Cole v. Scott, 14 Jur., part 1, p. 25), strongly exemplifies the shifts to which judges are driven by this legislative practice. In that case, a testator, dating his will, devised all his real and leasehold estates "whereof I am now seised or possessed," and he afterwards contracted for the purchase of other freehold property; and the question being, whether such after-acquired property passed—in other words, whether the will was to speak from its date, or from the date of the death—it was held that the after-acquired property did not pass.

It is of exceedingly little importance whether the general rule be that a will should speak from its date, or from the date of the death; that which is of importance is, that it should do one or the other with certainty. Nor is there much better reason for saying that a testator must be supposed to intend to pass by his will all that he has at the date of his death, than that he must be supposed to intend to confine his bequests to that which he possesses when he makes his will. On the contrary, when a man makes his will, he is really, in general, thinking and writing of his property as it is, and not as it may be. The old rule of law was, however, as to personalty, and the new rule, under the Wills Act, as to realty as well, is, to make the will speak from the death, "unless a contrary intention shall appear by the will." In the case of Cole v. Scott, a contrary intention was held to appear from the insertion of a date to the will, and the use of the word "now." "My difficulty," said the Lord Chancellor, "is this—a date is given, coupled with the word 'now.' It would be a strong thing to say that that is not to apply to the time named. Had the words been 'whereof I am seised,' there would not have been the same difficulty, and that would be the time from which the will speaks; but by the introduction of the word 'now,' the testator has fixed another date, to which the word is applicable." Now, whether the decision in Cole v. Scott was right or not, it cannot escape observation, that, in the reasoning on which it was based, the Court was driven to an extraordinary degree of refinement in order to decide something, when the vagueness of the act of Parliament left it without guide, or perhaps in order to escape from putting on the will the construction primarily directed by the act—a construction which, in nine cases out of ten, does not at all meet the real intention of the testator. It is conceded, and is abundantly clear, that if a testator simply devises all "I am seised of," &c., that will pass after-acquired estates. It is undoubtedly the fact, that a great many wills are made long before death, and that almost all wills have a date. Therefore, where a man, writing in the year 1850, devises all "I am seised of," and dies in 1860, having increased his store, the law says that he meant in 1850, by all "I am seised of," all that I shall be seised of in 1860. On the other hand, if one asks any living man what he means by "I have" or "I am," he means "I have or am now." If you ask him what balance he has at his banker's, and he replies "I have so much," unquestionably he means "I have now so much," and it never would occur to him that he must say "I have now so much," in order to prevent the conclusion in his hearer's mind, that he meant to refer to what he should have at a future time. So it may be most reasonably supposed, that if a man were asked what he meant when he writes in his will "I give all I am possessed of," he would answer, "all that I am now possessed of;" inasmuch as no man (supposing him ignorant of law) imagines that "I am" means "I shall be," or says "I give what I have," meaning "I give what I shall have."

Therefore, it being admitted that a will, using the words "I give what I am possessed of," speaks from the date of the death, although it may bear an antecedent date; and that in every verbal or written statement, not being subjected to the rule of the Wills Act, men mean the present state of things when they use the present tense; it is certainly a very refined reasoning which makes the word "now," requisite in a will, to indicate that the present tense does not include the future. We are not having the boldness, any more than the inclination, to quarrel with Cole v. Scott as law. We are only too glad to see the point arising in it decided, because then we have at least a rule settled as to one class of expressions of intention; but it is lamentable that an act of Parliament should make it necessary for a Court to decide upon reasoning so artificial, and in itself unsatisfactory. If the statute had said that all wills shall speak from the death of the testator, unless he expressly directs otherwise, there would then scarcely ever be any difficulty. But so long as the rule remains as it is, there must be always great difficulty in advising in any case raising the question, what is a "contrary intention appearing by the will." For if there be a substantial difference between the meaning of "I am" and "I am now," what are the expressions, not being on all fours, between which astuteness may not perceive a distinction?

Sect. 1. Ordnance maps to be adapted and used for the purposes of this act.

2. Land indexes to be made, having references to the maps.

3. Commissioners of the Treasury to give notice of commencement of registration under this act.

4. No memorial of assurances to be registered; but all such assurances may be registered by depositing an original, and making the proper entries. The documents deposited to be made up into books or parcels, and numbered.

5. An index, to be called "The Index of Titles," to be kept for all Ireland; and assurances to be indexed in such index, under heads designated by numbers.

1. Where the grantor does not derive title under any registered assurance, the assurance is to be indexed under a new head.

2. Where the grantor does derive title under a registered assurance, the assurance is to be indexed under the same head as the assurance under which title is derived.

3. Power enabling an assurance required by regulation 2 to be indexed under an existing head to be indexed under a new head.

4. No assurance to be indexed under more than one head.

5. Particulars to be expressed on indexing an assurance.

6. The grantor of an equity of redemption is not to be considered as deriving his title under the mortgage deed.

6. Entries to be made in "Land Index" containing references to the entries in the "Index of Titles."

7. Decrees in equity creating, declaring, transferring, foreclosing, or determining interests in land, and also decrees in equity by which any such decrees shall be varied or reversed, and orders of exchange, partition, or division and allotment made by Incumbered Estates Commissioners, are to be considered assurances. Civil bill decrees under 56 Geo. 3, c. 88, may be registered.

8. Every private act of Parliament affecting lands to be an assurance.

9. Affidavit of ownership made under 13 & 14 Vict. c. 29, to be an assurance.

10. Where by a public act any lands are vested upon the payment of money, &c., a memorandum of the payment or other act may be registered. This clause not to extend to the vesting of the estate of a bankrupt or insolvent.

11. Equitable mortgage by deposit of deeds may be registered by depositing a memorandum.

12. Liens by reason of non-payment of purchase-money may be registered by depositing a memorandum.

13. The assurance to be considered to have been made by the person whose right, &c. in the lands shall be bound by the decree, &c.

14. Registration of wills.

15. Letters of administration or affidavit of intestacy may be registered.

16. An index, to be called "The Index to Wills and Administrations," to be kept for Ireland; and where a will, letters of administration, or affidavit is registered, an entry of the testator's or intestate's name to be made in such index, and also an entry of the will, letters, or affidavit.

17. Where the original is lost, a copy or extract may be deposited. In case of an extract, the registration to be effectual only as far as the extract agrees with the original.

18. Where the document directed by this act to be deposited at the register office is required to be deposited at any other office or place, a copy may be deposited at the register office.

19. Power to any person claiming under an assurance to compel the registration thereof by application to a judge.

20. Power to judge to make order as to costs, and to order an office copy to be furnished at the expense of the applicant.

21. Appointments of assignees in bankruptcy in England and Ireland, and acts and warrants of confirmation in Scotland, may be registered by deposit of copy and making proper entry.

22. Any order or appointment, &c. of assignees in insolvency may be registered by deposit of a copy or certificate and making the proper entry.

23. An index, to be called "The Index to Bankrupts and Insolvents," to be kept for Ireland.

24. Assurances authorised to be registered to be void as against purchasers, unless registered.

25. Estate or interest arising under public act upon payment of money, &c. Equitable mortgage by deposit of deeds, and lien for purchase-money, to be void as against purchaser, unless memorandum registered.

26. Assurance duly entered as to part only of the lands to be deemed duly registered as to such part.

27. Unregistered will to be void against purchaser from persons entitled under a registered will, or in default of a will where letters of administration or affidavit of intestacy registered.

28. Purchasers protected against bankruptcy and insolvency unless appointment of assignees, &c. be registered.

29. The priority given by the preceding clauses to be enforced in equity, notwithstanding notice.

30. Purchaser for valuable consideration not to be affected by notice of uses or trusts not manifested by a registered assurance, nor by uses or trusts declared by reference to an unregistered assurance.

31. Persons interested under uses or trusts affecting estates vested under a registered assurance may enter an inhibition against alienation.

32. Inhibition to be entered in index of titles.

33. Provision for cancelling inhibition.

34. Court of Chancery may restrain registrar from cancelling inhibition.

35. Persons claiming under assurances made while inhibition is on the registrar to be affected by uses and trusts not shown by a registered assurance.

36. Assurances registered at the same time to have priority according to the time of execution.

37. The protection of the act to extend to persons who claim under purchasers.

38. Protection by legal estate and tacking not to be allowed.

39. Power for any person to require an entry to be made under any head in index of titles referring to any assurance indexed under any other head.

40. An assurance which would have the effect of merging any interest not to have such effect as against a subsequent purchaser of such interest, unless an entry be made to lead such purchaser to the assurance.

41. Power to enter a caveat.

42. Mode of entering caveats.

43. Extent of protection to be afforded by caveats.

44. The protection of caveats restricted to specified cases.

45. A seal to be kept, and the impressions to be taken judicial notice of.

46. Duplicates of deposited documents may be compared at the office, and certified. Every document so certified to be received as evidence that another part of the same assurance has been deposited.

47. Copies of and extracts from deposited instruments to be provided, on application, and to be certified. The seal of the office, with a certificate, to be evidence of such copies and extracts.

48. Where there are duplicates of a registered assurance, one duplicate to be exempted from stamp duty, provided the deposited document is duly stamped. The exemption not to apply to duplicates of leases where either part is executed by lessee.

49. Memorials, office copies, extracts, and requisitions to be exempt from stamp duty.

50. Documents deposited at the register office not to be removed except on legal process.

51. Wills deposited at the register office may be removed for the purpose of being proved, &c. After being proved, &c. the will is to be returned.

52. Searches of the indexes to be permitted, and inspections of deposited instruments allowed. Searches of the indexes to be made on requisition, and certificates given.

53. The duties of attorneys, &c. to be fulfilled by causing an office search to be made. Attorneys, &c. indemnified in relying on the accuracy of certificates.

54. Power to the registrar to order that documents to be deposited shall be written bookwise, or otherwise, &c. Additional payment on persons sending documents to be deposited which shall not be conformable with such order.

55. Power to the registrar to require statements for relating the entries to be sent with assurances.

56. No officer of the register office to be responsible for omissions or mistakes occasioned by defects in the statement.
 57. Treasury to fix fees to be taken under this act.
 58. Power for the Treasury to make regulations as to numbering documents, making entries, examining documents, making copies, extracts, and searches, granting certificates, &c.
 59. Registration under this act to have the same effect against acts prior to commencement of registration as registration under former acts.
 60. Entries of decrees, judgments, rules, statutes, recognisances, Crown debts, and acceptances of office under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 90, not affected.
 61. Shares in companies not to be affected.
 62. Punishment for forging signatures required by this act, or counterfeiting impressions of the seal of the register office.

LONDON, OCTOBER 19, 1850.

THE Court of Exchequer has recently decided, in two cases, that a master is not liable to an action, at the suit of his servant, for injuries sustained in consequence of the negligence of a fellow-servant, while they are both acting in the master's service. The rule is, however, qualified to this extent, that unless the servant causing the injury be a person of ordinary skill and care, the master will be liable.

In both cases the actions were brought, under Lord Campbell's Act, (9 & 10 Vict. c. 93), by the representatives of the servants whose deaths had been occasioned by the negligence of their fellow-servants. In one Tutchenison v. The York, Newcastle, and Berwick Railway Company, 14 Jur., part 1, pp. 837, 840) the declaration stated that J. H. was in the service of the defendants, and that, in the discharge of his duty as such servant, he became a passenger upon the railway. The defendants, in a carriage drawn by an engine under the direction of the defendants' servants, and at another engine upon the same railway, under the direction of the defendants' servants, was so negligently driven as to come into collision with the said carriage, whereby J. H. was killed. The defendants pleaded, at the collision took place through the negligence of their servants, who were fit and competent persons; and the negligence was wholly unauthorised by the defendants, and was without their leave, licence, or knowledge. Upon special demurrer it was held, that no use of action was shewn upon the record.

In the second case (Wigmore v. Jay, 14 Jur., part 1, p. 837, 838, 841) the defendant was a builder, employed to build a wing to the hall of the London University, and the deceased, who was at work there for him, was killed by the fall of some scaffolding, which had been erected by persons of competent skill in the employment of his master. The action was held not to be maintainable. The Court recognised the authority of Priestley v. Fowler, (3 M. & W. 1), where the plaintiff was a servant of the defendant, and had sustained an injury by a fellow-servant having overloaded a van, in which the plaintiff was travelling, by the direction of the defendant, in discharge of his ordinary duties. The Court, after verdict for the plaintiff arrested the judgment, upon the ground that a master is not, in general, liable to one servant for damage resulting from the negligence of another.

It was admitted in all these cases, that if the party injured had been a stranger instead of a servant, he would have had a remedy against the master. The distinction is not at first sight obvious, inasmuch as the servant has no control over the employment of his fellow-servants; but this objection seems to be met by the qualification requiring the persons employed to be of ordinary skill and care. And when we consider the ground upon which the judgment of the Court proceeded, namely, upon the contract of hiring between the employer and the employed, the difference between such a case, and that of a stranger injured by the negligence of a servant, becomes at once apparent. The Court treated the risk of injury, arising from or connected with the employment, as a part of the service, and held that the servant must be supposed to have contracted on the terms, that, as between himself and his master, he would run that risk. "The principle is," said Alderson, B., in delivering judgment, "that a servant, when he engages to serve a master, undertakes, as between himself and his master, to run all the ordinary risks of the service, and this includes the risk of negligence upon the part of a fellow-servant, when he is acting in the discharge of his duty as servant of him who is the common master of both." But, as we have seen, the servant causing the injury must be a person of ordinary care and skill. "The servant, when he engages to run the risks of his service, including those arising from the negligence of fellow-servants, has a right to understand that the master has taken reasonable care to protect him from risk, by associating him only with persons of ordinary skill and care." And the master will not be exempt from responsibility to his servant for an injury occasioned to him by the act of another servant, where the servant injured was not at the time of the injury acting in the service of his master. "In such a case, the servant injured is substantially a stranger, and entitled to all the privileges he would have had if he had not been a servant."

The principle, therefore, to be deduced from these decisions is, that a master is not responsible to his servant for an injury sustained by such servant in consequence of the negligence of a fellow-servant, provided the servant injured was at the time acting in his master's service, and the servant causing the injury was a person of ordinary skill and care.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

Sir,—I observe in Mr. Tilley's edition of the new Stamp Act (13 & 14 Vict. c. 97) the following propositions:—

1st. "Notwithstanding the decisions that establish the general proposition, that a deed, when brought to be stamped, is chargeable with the duty then payable, and not that to which it was liable when made, all instruments executed by any party, or dated, before the 11th October, 1850, will be liable to the old, and not the new duties." (P. 3).

2nd. After stating the new terms imposed on parties applying to have instruments stamped after execution, (namely, a penalty of 10*l.* instead of 5*l.*, with interest on the duty unpaid, not exceeding the amount of principal), Mr. Tilley adds—"It is material to notice that this enactment takes effect immediately on the passing of the act, and has reference to instruments executed previously as well as subsequent thereto."

Now, Sir, I submit that both of these propositions are manifestly erroneous; and I observe the errors with more alarm, because they are important; and proceeding from a gentleman who fills the office of Assistant Solicitor of Inland Revenue, and who is known to be the executive mind of the department to which he belongs, they do not promise well for the soundness of the law to be administered in the new Court of Stamp Law which the recent act has erected at Somerset House.

Mr. Tilley's reason for the first proposition is, that the new act provides that the duties chargeable at the time of passing the act shall not be repealed in relation to any instrument signed, or executed, or bearing date on or before the 10th October, 1850. But that is merely a mode of stating the time when the act is to come into operation. The stat. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 21, repealed the then existing duty on certain agreements, and substituted a duty of 2*s.* 6*d.*, with an express exception of agreements previously executed; yet it was held, that an agreement executed without a stamp before the passing of the act, and afterwards stamped, on payment of the penalty, with a stamp of 2*s.* 6*d.*, was sufficiently stamped. (Deakin v. Penniell, 2 Exch. 320).

As to the second proposition, it is sufficient to observe that the enactment only applies "where any deed or instrument liable to stamp-duty shall be written on vellum, parchment, or paper, and shall be signed or executed by any person before such vellum, parchment, or paper shall be duly stamped"—language which has never, within my experience, been held to be retrospective.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

ONERATEX.

[We conceive that our correspondent is quite right in his conclusions as to both points. The terms on which deeds may be stamped after execution are settled by acts of Parliament, which have received this construction—that the duty to be paid is the duty which would be by law payable on the deed if it were executed at the time when it is taken to be stamped. Whether the decisions are right or wrong is a point which Mr. Tilley can hardly mean to settle by his own dictum. The acts, so construed, govern the stamping of all instruments executed before the new act was passed. That act has provisions for the stamping of deeds, which may possibly receive a different construction, but those provisions are most unquestionably confined to instruments executed after the act passed.—Ed.]

37. Commissioners to report to Parliament where Abandonment authorised by them.
38. Interpretation of Terms.
39. Short Title.
40. Act may be amended &c.

Whereas divers joint-stock companies have been incorporated by act of Parliament for making railways, and it has been found that such railways, or certain parts thereof, cannot be made or carried on with advantage either to the promoters thereof or to the public, and it is expedient therefore that facilities should be given for the abandonment of such railways or parts of railways, and for the dissolution of such companies, or some of them, and winding-up the concerns thereof: be it therefore enacted, &c., that if any company authorised by act of Parliament heretofore passed to make a railway desire that the making and carrying on of such railway, or some part thereof, whether commenced or not, be abandoned, such company may, by the authority and with the consent of the holders of three-fifths of the shares or stock of such company, represented in manner hereinafter mentioned at a general meeting of shareholders to be convened in manner hereinafter mentioned, make application in writing to the Commissioners of Railways, setting forth the particulars of the railway or portion of the railway desired to be abandoned by them, and the grounds upon which such application is made.

2. That it shall be lawful for the directors of any such railway company at any time to call a meeting of the shareholders thereof for the purpose of determining whether such application shall be made to the Commissioners of Railways, and so from time to time as they shall see fit.

3. That it shall be lawful for any number of shareholders of any such company, not being less than five, and holding in the aggregate not less than one-twentieth of the capital or stock of the company, consisting of shares or stock whereon all calls for the time being have been paid up, but exclusive of any shares or stock held by or in the names of the directors of the company, or any of them, or by or in the name of any person in trust for the directors or any of them, or for the company, and which shareholders shall have paid all the calls then due on the shares held by them, by writing under their hands to require the directors of such company to call a meeting for the purpose aforesaid; and upon the receipt of any such requisition such directors shall forthwith proceed to call a meeting of the shareholders of such company on a day to be named by them, not being less than fourteen nor more than twenty-eight days after the receipt of such requisition: provided always, on the default of the directors to call and advertise such meeting within fourteen days after the receipt of the requisition, it shall be lawful for the requisitionists to call such meeting themselves, at a time and place to be appointed by them, of which fourteen days' notice shall be given by them by advertisement as hereinafter provided: provided also, that when any meeting of any such company shall have been called pursuant to any such requisition as aforesaid, the directors of such company shall not be required to call any further meeting of such company upon any further requisition for the like object until twelve months shall have elapsed since the holding of such previous meeting.

4. That after any such meeting has been called by the directors, or after the receipt of any such requisition as aforesaid, it shall not be lawful for the directors to make any payments out of the monies of the company for the purposes of the railway proposed to be abandoned, except in discharge of bona fide debts or liabilities, or in performance of contracts or engagements previously entered into, and in payment of the expenses of calling and holding such meeting, nor to enter into any contracts or engagements on behalf of the company with respect to the railway so proposed to be abandoned, nor to make any calls, nor to register the transfer of any shares, until the meeting called as aforesaid shall have determined whether such application shall be made.

5. That the calling of any such meeting shall be by public advertisement in the manner required or usually adopted for advertising the extraordinary general meetings of such company, and where such meeting is called by the directors of the company a circular letter shall be sent by the post addressed to each of the registered shareholders of such company, according to his registered address or other known address, seven clear days at least before the holding of such meeting, and stating that a general meeting of the shareholders of such company will be held at a time and place mentioned in such circular, for the purpose of determining whether application shall be made to the Commissioners of Railways that such railway or the part thereof specified in such notice may be abandoned, and requesting such shareholder to signify his assent to or dissent therefrom, which may be according to a form to be contained in such circular letter, which form shall be to the effect set forth in the schedule hereto, and such circular letter shall request such shareholder either to return such form, signed by him, in a letter addressed to the secretary of such company, or to attend such general meeting as aforesaid, and deliver the same, so signed by him, to the chairman thereof; and in the case of every such meeting, whether called by the directors or by such requisitionists as aforesaid, the shareholders may signify their assent to or dissent from the proposed application, either by attending such meeting in person or by letter addressed to the secretary of the company, stating the assent or dissent of such shareholders, in a form which shall be to the effect of the form set forth in the schedule hereto, and signed by such shareholders respectively.

6. That at the meeting so to be called as aforesaid the scrutineers to be appointed as hereinafter mentioned shall cast up the amount of shares held by shareholders assenting to the making of such application, and the amount of shares held by shareholders dissenting therefrom, whether such assent or dissent have been signified by the shareholder sending to the secretary of the company such form as aforesaid, signed by him, or by such shareholder attending such meeting, and delivering in the same to the chairman thereof, and such scrutineers shall report to the chairman the amount of shares of the shareholders assenting to such application, and the amount of the shares of those dissenting therefrom, and the said chairman shall thereupon publicly announce to the meeting the said amounts respectively, and shall state whether or not the holders of three-fifths of the whole of such shares represented in manner aforesaid at the meeting consent to such application: provided always, that in computing the amount of shares of the shareholders assenting or dissenting as aforesaid no share shall be taken into account the holder whereof shall not have been duly registered, or who shall not have paid all the calls then due by him upon all the shares held by him, unless such calls shall have been made within three months prior to the holding of such meeting, or if such meeting be held pursuant to a requisition of shareholders as hereinbefore provided, then three months prior to the day on which such requisition was presented to the directors.

7. That the chairman of the directors of such company, if present, or in his absence the deputy chairman, if any, of such directors, shall be the chairman of such meeting as aforesaid, or if neither such chairman nor deputy chairman of the directors be present, any shareholder chosen for that purpose by a majority of the shareholders present at the meeting shall be the chairman thereof.

8. That at every such meeting the shareholders present thereat shall elect three shareholders of the company to be scrutineers for the purposes aforesaid, and in electing such scrutineers each shareholder shall have one vote only, and shall vote for one scrutineer only; and the decision of such scrutineers, or of any two of them, upon any of the matters hereby intrusted to them, shall be final in all respects.

9. That for the purpose of receiving the report of the said scrutineers the chairman of such meeting may, if he think fit, on the application of any one of such scrutineers, and he shall, if required by more than one of such scrutineers, adjourn such meeting to some time to be appointed by him, not less than one clear day nor more than seven clear days from the day of holding such meeting.

10. That a certificate under the hand of the chairman of the meeting, stating that such meeting as aforesaid has been duly held, and such consent given as aforesaid in cases where the same is given, shall within one week after the day of holding such meeting be deposited in the office of the said Commissioners of Railways.

11. Provided always, and be it enacted, that if it appear to any of the shareholders of any such company who shall have signed any such requisition, or been present at any such meeting as aforesaid at which the proposal to apply to the said commissioners to authorise the abandonment of the whole or part of a railway shall have been negatived or alleged to be negatived, either that such meeting was not duly called, or that the sense thereof was not duly taken according to the true intent and meaning of this act, and that if such meeting had been duly called, and the sense thereof duly taken, the consent of such meeting to the proposed application would have been given, it shall be lawful for any such shareholders, not being less in number than five, and holding in the aggregate not less than one-twentieth of the capital or stock of the company, consisting of shares or stock whereon all calls for the time being have been paid up, and which shareholders shall have paid all the calls then due on the shares held by them, to apply to the said commissioners, setting forth in writing the grounds on which they complain of the decision alleged to have been come to at such meeting as aforesaid, and praying that a further meeting may be called, and if it appear to the said commissioners (after hearing the parties complained of, if they desire to be heard) that there is good reason to believe that if such meeting had been duly called, and the sense thereof duly taken, the consent of such meeting to the proposed application to the said commissioners would have been given, the said commissioners shall certify their judgment to that effect, and shall direct a further meeting to be called by the directors of such company at the time and place to be appointed by the said commissioners, and the said directors shall call such meeting accordingly, or in default thereof it shall be lawful for the shareholders who complained to the said commissioners of the proceedings of the former meeting to call such meeting, and all the provisions of this act shall apply to any further meeting so directed to be called in like manner as to any original meeting hereinbefore authorised or required to be called.

12. That if at any such meeting any railway company shall determine, as hereinbefore mentioned, that such application as aforesaid shall be made, or if the said commissioners shall certify as aforesaid their judgment, that if such meeting had been duly called and the sense thereof duly taken the consent of such meeting to the proposed application to the said commissioners would have been given, then, as from the date of the resolution so come to at such meeting, or the date of the said certificate, as the case may be, the directors of such company shall not have power to proceed any further with the making of the railway, or the part thereof so proposed to be abandoned, until the decision of the Commissioners of Railways with respect to such application be made, and then only in accordance with such decision.

13. That if it appear to the said commissioners that there are sufficient grounds for entertaining such application, the said commissioners shall require and direct the company making the same to give notice of such application having been made, by advertisement inserted, in a form to be approved of by the said commissioners, once in the London, Edinburgh, or Dublin Gazette, according as the railway or part of the railway proposed to be abandoned is situate in England, Scotland, or Ireland, and once in each of three successive weeks in some newspaper published or circulated in each county in which any part proposed to be abandoned of such railway is situated, and affixed for three successive Sundays on the principal outer door of the church or churches of every parish in which any part of such railway where the whole is proposed to be abandoned, or in which any part proposed to be abandoned, is situate, and in Ireland such notice shall also be affixed to the Roman Catholic Chapel, and where there shall be no such church or chapel on some public or conspicuous place of such parish; and every such notice shall set forth within what time and in what manner any person who thinks himself aggrieved by any such proposed abandonment, and who desires to object thereto, may bring such objection before the commissioners.

14. That, for the purpose of ascertaining the state and condition of the company making any such application, and of inquiring into the expediency of the proposed abandonment of railway, and of determining the terms and conditions on which the same may be authorised by them, it shall be lawful for the Commissioners of Railways, by themselves or by any officer appointed and specially empowered by them for that purpose, to inspect the books of accounts, minutes of proceedings, or any other books, papers, or documents in the possession or control of such company, and also, if they see fit so to do, to send, at the expense of such railway company, or at the expense of any person who applies to them for that purpose, an officer to be appointed by them to inspect the railway or proposed railway or work so proposed to be abandoned, and to collect evidence on the spot relative to such abandonment; and if any such company, or any of their officers or servants, shall refuse such inspection by the said commissioners, or any officer appointed and specially empowered by them for that purpose, or refuse or wilfully neglect to produce to the said commissioners or any such officer, on demand, any books, papers, or documents in the possession or control of such company, every such company shall for every such refusal or neglect forfeit to her Majesty the sum of 20*l.*, and a further sum of 5*l.* for every day during which such refusal or wilful neglect shall be continued.

15. That upon proof to the satisfaction of the said commissioners that such notice has been duly given, and after the expiration of the time therein appointed for bringing objections before the said commissioners, and after considering all the objections, if any, brought before them, the said commissioners may, if they think fit, and upon such terms and conditions as they think fit, by warrant under their seal, and signed by two or more of the said commissioners, authorise the abandonment of the railway or portion of railway described in such warrant.

16. Provided always, and be it enacted, that in considering the objections which may be made by any of the shareholders of any railway company to the proposed abandonment:

of a part only of the railway of such company, and in determining the terms and conditions on which the said commissioners may think fit to authorise any such partial abandonment, the said commissioners shall have regard to the local situation of the lands and residences of the shareholders so objecting with reference to the portion of railway proposed to be abandoned; and in the case of any such shareholders being original subscribers to the undertaking, and not being solicitors, agents, or engineers employed in promoting the same, and whose places of residence or lands are adjoining or near the line of the portion of railway so proposed to be abandoned, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, if they think fit to do so, in any direction which (under the provision hereinafter contained) they may give for reducing the capital of the company authorised to construct such railway, to provide, at the request of any such last-mentioned shareholders, that the nominal amount of the shares held by them in such company may be reduced to the amount then already paid up by them respectively, or to such other extent as the said commissioners may think fit to order in that behalf, or the said commissioners may, at the like request, direct any such shares to be cancelled, and a part of the monies that may have been paid up in respect of such shares, bearing such proportion to the whole as the said commissioners having regard to all the circumstances of the case shall think fit to determine, to be repaid to such shareholders.

17. That within one month after the day on which any such warrant as aforesaid is granted by the said commissioners the railway company to which the same applies shall cause notice thereof to be inserted in the London, Edinburgh, or Dublin Gazette, according as the railway or part of railway mentioned therein is situate in England, Scotland, or Ireland, and once in each of three successive weeks in some newspaper published or circulating in each county in which any part of such abandoned railway is situate, and to be affixed for three successive Sundays on the principal outer door of the church or churches of every parish in which any such part of such railway is situate, and in Ireland such notice shall also be affixed to the Roman Catholic chapel, and where there shall be no such church or chapel, on some public or conspicuous place of such parish; and every such notice shall require all persons having any claims or demands upon the said company for compensation or otherwise, by reason of the abandonment of railway authorised by such warrant, to transmit the statement of such claims or demands to the secretary of such company, at the office or usual place of business of the same company, within four months from the date of such warrant.

18. That, upon proof to the satisfaction of the said commissioners that notice of such warrant has been duly published in manner hereinbefore required, the said commissioners shall certify the same accordingly; and such certificate shall be received in all courts of justice or elsewhere as evidence that such notice was duly published as aforesaid.

19. That after the granting of any such warrant, and the publication of such notice thereof as aforesaid, the company shall (subject to the provisions hereinafter contained) be released from all liability to make, maintain, or work the railway mentioned in such warrant, or the part thereof thereby authorised to be abandoned, or to purchase any of the lands required for the making thereof, or to complete the purchase of any such lands for the purchase of which notice may have been given, or any contract entered into, by or on behalf of the company, or to complete any contract for or concerning the making, maintaining, or working of the railway so to be abandoned, or any other contract relating to the railway or part of railway so authorised to be abandoned which by reason of such abandonment cannot be performed: provided always, that nothing in this act contained shall extend to release the company from any liability to complete the purchase of any land or the purchase of which any contract may have been entered into by or on behalf of the company, and which contract may have been in part performed, or by virtue or in pursuance of which a specified sum or price as the consideration for the purchase of the lands thereby agreed to be sold to or taken by the company shall have been fixed or ascertained previously to the passing of this act, notwithstanding the time for the completion of the purchase named in such contract shall have been subsequently extended by agreement or arrangement with the company.

20. Provided always, and be it enacted, that in every case in which before the granting of any such warrant any notice hath been given or contract entered into by or on behalf of the company named therein for purchasing any lands which such company were by the acts relating thereto empowered to purchase for the purpose of constructing the railway or portion of railway so authorised to be abandoned, and from which contract such company would be relieved under the provisions hereinbefore contained, or where any contract hath been entered into for or concerning the constructing, maintaining, or working of the railway or part of railway so authorised to be abandoned, or any other contract relating thereto, which by reason of such abandonment cannot be performed, the company shall make to the owners or occupiers of and other parties interested in such lands, or being parties to such contracts as aforesaid, compensation, to be determined by arbitration as hereinafter mentioned, for all injury or damage, if any, sustained by such owners, occupiers, and other parties by reason of such purchase not being completed pursuant to such notice, or by reason of such contract not being performed.

21. That where any railway or part of a railway so authorised to be abandoned shall have been then made or commenced, such company shall make to the owners and occupiers of the lands adjoining the railway or part of a railway so commenced or made, and authorised to be abandoned, compensation, to be determined by arbitration as hereinafter mentioned, for all such injury or damage, if any, as shall be sustained by such owners or occupiers by reason of the omission to make gates, passages, drains, watercourses, bridges, and such other works, for the accommodation of lands adjoining the railway, as such company would have been required to make if such railway had not been allowed to be abandoned.

22. That where the line of any railway so authorised to be abandoned shall have been wholly or partially laid out, and any road shall have been carried across such line of railway by means of a bridge or tunnel over or under such railway, which bridge or tunnel the company to whom such railway belonged would, in case the same had not been abandoned, have been liable to keep in repair, then in every such case, except where such bridge or tunnel shall, with the permission of the said commissioners, be by such company removed, and such road restored to the like or an equally convenient and good state as the same was in before it was interfered with by the makers of such railway, to the satisfaction (in case of difference between such company and the owner or persons having the management of such road) of the Commissioners of Railways, such company shall pay to the owner of such road, if it be a private road, or to the trustees, surveyors of highways, or other persons having the management of such road, if it be a turnpike or other public road, a sum of money, to be determined by arbitration as after mentioned, in lieu and discharge of their liability to keep such bridge or tunnel, and also the roadway over the same, in repair.

23. That every sum so to be paid as last aforesaid to such trustees, surveyors, or other persons as aforesaid shall be by them forthwith paid over to the treasurer of the county where the bridge or tunnel in respect of which such sum was paid is situate, and shall be by him invested in Consolidated Bank Annuities or other public securities, and the dividends or income thereof shall, until Parliament shall otherwise provide, be applied in the maintenance of the bridge or tunnel in respect whereof the same was paid, in such manner as the justices in quarter sessions having jurisdiction where such bridge or tunnel is situate shall order.

24. That every sum so to be paid as last aforesaid in Scotland to such trustees or other persons as aforesaid shall be by them paid into the Bank, and the interest to arise thereon shall, until Parliament shall otherwise provide, be applied in the maintenance of the bridge or tunnel in respect whereof the same was paid, in such manner as the sheriff of the county in which such bridge or tunnel is situate, in case of any difficulty arising, shall direct.

25. That the amount of the compensation so to be made in the several cases aforesaid shall be determined, in case of difference, by arbitration, in the manner provided by the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, or the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, (Scotland), 1845, as the case may require, and for that purpose all the clauses of the said Railways Clauses Consolidation Acts with respect to the settlement of disputes by arbitration shall be deemed to be incorporated with this act: provided always, that no such railway company shall be liable to make any compensation in respect of damage alleged to have been sustained by reason of the abandonment of the railway or part of the railway, or the non-completion of any contract of such company in any of the cases aforesaid, unless the claim for such compensation shall have been made within six months after the publication in the Gazette of the notice of the warrant for such abandonment as hereinbefore provided.

26. Provided also, and be it enacted, that the authority so as aforesaid given for abandoning the making of any such railway or part of a railway shall not prejudice or affect the right of the owner or occupier of any lands to receive from such company compensation for any damage that may have been occasioned by the entry of such company upon such lands, for the purpose of surveying and taking levels, and of probing or boring to ascertain the nature of the soil, or of setting out the line of the railway, pursuant to the provisions for that purpose in the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, (Scotland), 1845, contained.

27. That all the lands acquired by such company for the purposes of the railway or part of railway so authorised to be abandoned shall be sold by such company within the time limited or prescribed for that purpose in the warrant authorising the abandonment of such railway, and if no time be therein prescribed for that purpose, then within two years from the date of such warrant, in the manner prescribed by the said Lands Clauses Consolidation Acts with respect to the sale of superfluous lands; and for that purpose all the clauses of the said last-mentioned acts with respect to the lands acquired by the promoters of the undertaking under the provisions of their special act, but which are not required for the purposes thereof, shall be deemed to be incorporated with this act: provided always, that the offer to be made by the railway company pursuant to the said acts to sell such lands to the person entitled to the lands from which the same were severed shall be made at a price or sum not greater than the price or sum at which such lands were purchased by such company.

28. That when the said Commissioners of Railways, by any such warrant as aforesaid, authorise the abandonment of a part only of the railway of any railway company, they may, if they think fit, require that the capital authorised to be raised by such company in respect of such railway shall be reduced to such extent and in such manner as the said commissioners think fit, and so that such reduction do not bear a greater proportion to the whole capital so authorised to be raised than the cost of the part of the railway so authorised to be abandoned would have borne to the cost of the whole railway; and they may also, if they think fit, in like manner reduce the amount which such company are authorised to borrow on mortgage or bond, and every such reduction shall be expressed in the said warrant; and in every such case the capital of such company, and their power of borrowing money, shall be reduced and limited in conformity with the directions for that purpose contained in such warrant; and such company shall have all the same powers for enforcing the payment of calls in respect of the shares in the capital when reduced in the manner required by the said commissioners, and for enforcing the forfeiture of any such shares in default of payment of such calls, as such company would have had in respect of the original capital of such company if this act had not been passed: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall authorise the said company to reduce or interfere with any amount of capital paid up or called for before the 11th day of February, 1850, and entitled to any preferential or guaranteed dividend or interest.

29. That after the granting of any such warrant as aforesaid for the abandonment of the whole railway of any railway company the powers of such company for the construction, maintenance, and management of such railway shall cease, and such company shall continue to exist only for the purpose of winding-up their affairs, and they shall accordingly, subject to the provisions herein contained with respect to the sale of lands acquired by such company for the purposes of their railway, proceed with all convenient speed to collect and to convert into money all their property and effects, and shall in the first place pay and satisfy all their debts and liabilities, and after full payment and satisfaction thereof shall distribute the surplus funds among the shareholders of the company in proportion to their shares and interests therein, and for the purposes aforesaid all the powers of such company shall continue in full force and effect; and when and so soon as the same shall have been fully accomplished such company shall be dissolved, and cease to exist.

30. That, notwithstanding the provision in the Joint-stock Companies Winding-up Amendment Act, 1849, excepting railway companies incorporated by act of Parliament from the application of the Joint-stock Companies Winding-up Act, 1848, the said two several acts shall nevertheless apply to any railway company incorporated by act of Parliament in respect of which an order may have been made by the Court of Chancery for winding-up the affairs of such company previous to the passing of the said Joint-stock Companies Winding-up Amendment Act, 1849, and the proceedings for winding-up the same shall proceed and be carried on under the said Joint-stock Companies Winding-up Act, 1848, and the said Joint-stock Companies Winding-up Amendment Act, 1849, or either of them.

31. That where any such warrant as aforesaid shall have been granted for the abandonment of the whole railway of any railway company in England or Ireland, any shareholder of such company may present a petition under the Joint-stock Companies Winding-up Act, 1848, or any act for the amendment of such act, for the winding-up of the affairs of such company under the said act, and for that purpose the railway company whose railway is so authorised to be abandoned shall, if the Court shall think fit so to order, (notwithstanding anything to the contrary thereof in the said Joint-stock Companies Winding-up Act, or in the Joint-stock Companies Winding-up Amendment Act, 1849), be deemed to be a company to which the said act applies.

32. That where any such warrant as aforesaid shall have been granted for the abandonment of the whole railway of any railway company in Scotland, any shareholder of such company may present a petition to the Court of Session, praying the said Court to sequester such company, and it shall thereupon be lawful for the said Court to issue a deliverance awarding sequestration of such company, and to appoint a factor, who shall take possession of and recover the estate of such company, and realise and manage the same, for the purposes of this act, and for winding-up and distributing the same with due regard to the rights and interests of the creditors and shareholders, and of all others concerned therein.

33. That it shall be competent to the said Court to establish, by acts of sederunt to be passed by them, all such rules and regulations as may be necessary in relation to the summary statement, discussion, and adjudication of all claims at the instance of creditors, shareholders, and other parties against such company, and by such rules and regulations to apply, as far as may be practicable and expedient, towards the purposes of this act, the provisions of an act passed in the session of Parliament holden in the 2 & 3 Vict., [c. 41.] intitled "An Act for regulating the Sequestration of the Estates of Bankrupts in Scotland;" and it shall be competent to the said Court so also to establish all such other rules and regulations as may be necessary for carrying fully into effect the purposes of this act.

34. That in the event of the affairs of any such company being wound-up under any such petition, the compensation hereinbefore directed to be given to the owners and occupiers of lands and others in respect of the damage sustained by them by reason of such abandonment in the cases hereinbefore mentioned, or by reason of the non-completion of any such contract as aforesaid, or otherwise, shall be deemed a demand claimed from, and when ascertained in the manner provided by this act a debt due from, such company, and the party by whom such compensation is claimed shall be deemed a "creditor," in England or Ireland, within the provisions of the said Joint-stock Companies Winding-up Act, or, in Scotland, within the provisions of the said recited act of the second and third years of the reign of her present Majesty; and in case any lands purchased by such railway company shall be sold by the official manager under the said act, they shall be sold in the manner and subject to the provisions contained in this act.

35. Provided always, and be it enacted, that this act, or any proceeding thereunder, shall not prejudice or affect any action or suit or other proceeding at law or in equity commenced before the 11th day of February, 1850, or any action or suit brought in connexion with and during the dependence of and involving the same matter with such action or suit, nor any action, suit, or other proceeding against a company which shall not have obtained a warrant authorising the abandonment of the railway or part of a railway in respect of which such action, suit, or other proceeding shall be instituted, unless such company shall, within three days after notice for that purpose from the party suing them, give such party notice of their intention to apply for such warrant, and shall obtain the same, and serve notice thereof on such party within three calendar months thereafter, but all such actions and suits and their proceedings shall be proceeded with, and judgments reversed, and rules, orders, and decrees made therein shall be enforced, as if this act had not been passed, save only that the same, after notice given by the company of their intention to abandon as aforesaid, shall be suspended for three calendar months, if the warrant be refused, or be not obtained within at time.

36. Provided always, and be it enacted, that nothing in this act contained shall extend or be construed to extend to authorise the abandonment by any company of any railway or portion of a railway, or other works, which such company has agreed under its corporate seal to make and construct, according to any agreement entered into either with any individual or with any other company, unless such individual or company shall consent in writing to such abandonment.

37. That in each case in which the said commissioners authorise the abandonment of the whole or a portion of a railway, they shall, within ten days after issuing their warrant for that purpose, if Parliament be then sitting, or if not, then as soon thereafter as Parliament meets, lay before both Houses of Parliament a copy of every such warrant, accompanied by such report and observations as shall in the judgment of such commissioners set forth and explain the reasons for their award and warrant in every such case as aforesaid.

38. That the following words and expressions in this act shall have the meanings hereby assigned to them, unless there is something in the subject or context repugnant to such construction; that is to say—

Words importing the singular number only shall include the plural number, and words importing the plural number only shall include also the singular number:

CAP. XC.

An Act to confirm certain Provisional Orders of the General Board of Health, and for certain other Purposes in Relation to the Public Health Act, 1848. [14th August, 1850.]

CAP. XCI.

An Act to authorise Justices of any Borough having a separate Gaol to commit Assize Prisoners to such Gaol, and to extend the Jurisdiction of Borough Justices to all Offences and Matters arising within the Borough for which they act. [14th August, 1850.]

- Sect. 1. Prisoners may be committed to Borough Gaols for Trial at the Assizes.
2. Nothing to authorise Justices to commit Persons charged with Murder to any other than the County Gaol. As to Expenses incurred in Maintenance of last-mentioned Prisoners.
3. Prisoners committed to Borough Gaols to be removed to County Gaol previous to Trial.
4. Prisoners whilst under Removal to be deemed to be in proper legal Custody.
5. Expenses of Prisoners removed to County Gaols to be calculated as provided by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 98.
6. Account of Expenses to be made out and signed by Clerk of Justices, and sent to Town-clerk of Borough.
7. In Cases of Conviction for Offences committed within Limits of any City, &c., Court may commit Offender to Borough Gaol. In Case of Commitment of Persons.
8. Provisions as to Removal before Trial to apply to Removal after Conviction.

9. Borough Justices to have the same Jurisdiction as County Justices under any local Act as to Offences committed within the Borough.

10. Interpretation of Terms.
11. Extent of Act.
12. Act may be amended &c.

Whereas great inconvenience and expense have been found to result to cities and boroughs having or providing and maintaining at their own cost gaols or houses of correction, from the necessity of committing to the common gaol of the county in which such city or borough may be situated for trial at the assizes holden for such county persons charged with offences committed within the limits of such city or borough, and it is expedient that the law should be altered and amended; and whereas it is also expedient that justices of the peace acting for any city or borough should have the same powers and authorities in all respects with regard to offences committed and matters arising within the limits of such city or borough as justices of the peace for the county within which such city or borough is situated now have with regard to such offences or matters under or by virtue of any local or general act of Parliament: be it therefore enacted, &c., that from and after the passing of this act it shall be lawful for any justice of the peace acting for any city or borough now having or providing and maintaining at its own cost, or which shall hereafter have or provide and maintain at its own cost, a gaol or house of correction, to commit for safe custody to such gaol or house of correction, for trial at the assizes to be holden for the county in which such city or borough may be situated, any person charged before him with any offence except murder, committed within the limits of such city or borough triable at such assizes, and the commitment shall specify that such person is committed under the authority of this act, and whenever any such person shall be committed to any such gaol or house of correction for trial at such assizes the keeper of such gaol or house of correction shall deliver to the judges of assize a calendar of all prisoners in his custody for trial at such assizes, in the same way that the sheriff of the county would be by law required to do if such prisoners had been committed to the common gaol of the county in which such city or borough may be situated; and the justice or justices by whom any person charged as aforesaid shall be committed shall deliver or cause to be delivered to the proper officer of the court the several recognisances, informations, depositions, and statements relative to such person at the time and in the manner that would be required in case such person had been committed to such county gaol.

2. Provided always, and be it enacted, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to give any justice of the peace acting for any city or borough power to commit persons charged with murder to the gaol or house of correction of any city or borough for trial at the assizes to be holden for the county in which such city or borough may be situated, but such justices shall and they are hereby authorised and required to commit all such persons to the common gaol of such county for trial in such and the same manner as if this act had not passed: provided also, that the expenses properly incurred by such county in the maintenance, safe custody, and care of such last-mentioned prisoners so committed whilst in custody in such county gaol shall be borne and paid by such city or borough in the manner hereinafter provided with respect to prisoners removed to the county gaol for trial at the assizes.

3. That all persons who may under the authority of this act be committed to the gaol or house of correction of any city or borough for trial at the assizes to be holden for the county in which such city or borough may be situated shall in due time be removed by the gaoler or keeper of such gaol or house of correction, with their commitments and detainers, to the common gaol of the county, in order that they may be tried at the assizes to be holden for such county, and such removal shall not be deemed or taken to be an escape.

4. That every prisoner so removed shall for and during the time of such removal, and also for and during such time as he shall be detained in the county gaol, be to all intents and purposes deemed and considered to be in the proper legal custody, notwithstanding he may in effecting such removal have been taken out of the jurisdiction of the city or borough to the gaol or house of correction of which he may have been originally committed into any other jurisdiction, or out of the county in which such gaol or house of correction may be situated into or through any other county or division of a county: and as action or other proceeding shall or may be maintained by such prisoner or by any other person against the gaoler or keeper of the gaol or house of correction of any city or borough, or against the gaoler or keeper of the common gaol of the county, by reason or in consequence of such prisoner having been taken out of the jurisdiction of such city or borough into any other jurisdiction, or out of the county in which such city or borough may be situated into or through any other county or division of a county.

5. That the expenses which shall be incurred by such county in the maintenance, safe custody, and care of every prisoner so removed whilst in custody in such county gaol, shall be calculated upon the same principle and in the same manner as provided by an act passed in the 5 & 6 Vict., [c. 98.] intitled "An Act to amend the Laws concerning Prisons," with respect to borough prisoners committed to a county prison where no special contract is subsisting between such borough and county relative to such prisoners; and such expenses, and all other expenses which may be incurred by such county in respect of every such prisoner, shall be paid by the council of such city or borough to the treasurer of such gaol or county; and the amount of all such expenses shall, in case of dispute, be settled by a barrister-at-law in the manner provided by the said act.

6. That an account in writing of the expenses due and payable, or claimed to be due and payable, in respect of the maintenance, safe custody, and care of such prisoners as aforesaid, shall be made out from time to time, and signed by the clerk to the visiting justices of the county gaol to which such prisoners shall have been committed, and delivered to the town-clerk of the city or borough within which the offences shall have been committed; and such account shall be conclusive against such city or borough, unless some objection shall be made in writing, and signed by the town-clerk of such city or borough, and delivered to the clerk of the said visiting justices, within one calendar month next after such account shall have been delivered to such town-clerk.

7. That whenever any person shall be convicted at any assizes of any offence committed within the limits of any city or borough having or providing and maintaining at its own cost a gaol or house of correction, for which offence such person shall be liable either to the punishment of transportation or imprisonment, it shall be lawful for the court, if it shall so think fit, to commit such person to such gaol or house of correction, in execution of his judgment; and in case of the commitment of any person either sentenced to transportation or pardoned for any capital offence on condition of transportation, all the powers, provisions, and authorities for the removal of offenders sentenced to transportation given or granted by any former act or acts of Parliament to sheriffs or gaolers shall be and the same are hereby extended and given to the gaoler or keeper of the gaol or house of correction in whose custody such offender shall be.

8. That all the provisions hereinbefore contained with reference to the removal of prisoners from any city or borough gaol to the county gaol for trial at the assizes shall be applicable and shall be applied to the removal from the county gaol to any city or borough gaol of any prisoner who, having been convicted at the assizes, shall be committed by the court to such gaol or house of correction, in execution of his judgment.

9. That after the passing of this act the justices of every city or borough shall have the same jurisdiction with respect to all offences committed and matters arising within such city or borough as the justices of the county in which such city or borough is situate now have under or by virtue of any local or general act of Parliament; and such offences and matters shall be cognisable by one or more of the justices of such city or borough in the same manner as such offences and matters are now cognisable by one or more of the justices of such county: provided always, that in every case in which imprisonment may be awarded for or in respect of any such offences or matters aforesaid, or to enforce payment of any penalty, rate, sum of money, or costs imposed or made payable by or by virtue of any such general or local act or otherwise, such imprisonment may be awarded to take place in any gaol or house of correction to which the justices of the said city or borough now have or hereafter may have power to commit offenders.

10. That throughout this act, where there shall be nothing in the subject or context repugnant to such construction, words importing the singular number only shall include the plural number, and words importing the plural number only shall include the singular number, and words importing the masculine gender only shall include females.

11. That this act shall extend only to England and Wales.

12. That this act may be amended or repealed by any act to be passed in this present session of Parliament.

The Security to be renewed.*
 20. Construction of certain Terms used in Stamp Acts.
 21. Act may be amended &c.

Whereas by an act passed in the 55 Geo. 3, [c. 184,] intitled "An Act for repealing the Stamp-duties on Deeds, Law Proceedings, and other written or printed Instruments, and the Duties on Fire Insurances, and on Legacies, and Successions to Personal Estate upon Intestacies, now payable in Great Britain, and for granting other Duties in Lieu thereof," certain stamp-duties specified and contained in a schedule to the said act annexed were granted and made payable in and throughout Great Britain, for and in respect of the several instruments, matters, and things described or mentioned in the said schedule: and whereas by an act passed in the 3 Geo. 4, [c. 117,] intitled "An Act to reduce the Stamp-duties on Reconveyances of Mortgages and in certain other Cases, and to amend an Act of the last Session of Parliament for removing Doubts as to the Amount of certain Stamp-duties in Great Britain and Ireland respectively," certain stamp-duties therein mentioned or referred to were repealed, and in lieu thereof certain other stamp-duties in the said last-recited act specified were granted and made payable in and throughout Great Britain and Ireland respectively: and whereas by an act passed in the 5 & 6 Vict., [c. 82,] intitled "An Act to assimilate the Stamp-duties in Great Britain and Ireland, and to make Regulations for collecting and managing the same until the 10th Day of October, 1845," certain of the said stamp-duties granted by the said first-recited act were extended to and made payable in Ireland; and under and by virtue of the said three several acts, and also of two other acts passed respectively in the 8 & 9 Vict. [c. 2,] and 11 & 12 Vict. [c. 9,] for continuing the said last-recited act, the said stamp-duties are now payable in Great Britain and Ireland respectively: and whereas it is expedient to repeal certain of the said stamp-duties, so far as the same relate to the several instruments, matters, and things mentioned and described in the schedule to this act annexed, and to substitute in lieu thereof other rates of duties for and in respect of the same instruments, matters, and things: be it therefore enacted, &c., that from and after the 10th day of October, 1850, the several stamp-duties now payable in Great Britain and Ireland respectively, under or by virtue of the said several acts hereinbefore recited or referred to, or any of the said acts respectively, or any other act or acts, for or in respect of the several instruments, matters, and things described or mentioned in the said schedule to this act annexed, and whereon other duties are by this act granted and imposed, shall respectively cease and determine, and shall be and the same are hereby repealed, and in lieu and instead thereof there shall be granted, raised, levied, collected, and paid in and throughout the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, unto and for the use of her Majesty, her heirs and successors, for and in respect of the said several instruments, matters, and things, or for or in respect of the vellum, parchment, or paper upon which the same respectively shall be written, the several duties or sums of money set down in figures against the same respectively, or otherwise specified and set forth in the said last-mentioned schedule, and that the said last-mentioned schedule, and the several provisions, regulations, and directions therein contained with respect to the said duties, and the instruments, matters, and things charged therewith, shall be deemed and taken to be part of this act, and shall be applied, observed, and put in execution accordingly: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall extend to repeal or alter any of the said duties now payable in relation to any deed or instrument which shall have been signed or executed by any party thereto, or which shall bear date before or upon the said 10th day of October, 1850.

2. That the said duties by this act granted shall be denominated and deemed to be stamp-duties, and shall be under the care and management of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue for the time being; and that all powers, provisions, clauses, regulations, directions, and exemptions, fines, forfeitures, pains, and penalties, contained in or imposed by the said recited act of the fifty-fifth year of the reign of King George III and the schedule thereto annexed, and in or by any other act or acts, relating to any duties of the same kind or description heretofore payable in Great Britain and Ireland respectively, and in force at the time of the passing of and not repealed by this act, shall respectively be of full force and effect with respect to the duties by this act granted, and to the vellum, parchment, and paper, instruments, matters, and things, charged and chargeable therewith, and to the persons liable to the payment of the said duties, so far as the same are or shall be applicable, in all cases not hereby expressly provided for, and shall be observed, applied, allowed, collected, and put in execution for and in the raising, levying, collecting, and securing of the said duties hereby granted, and otherwise in relation thereto, so far as the same shall not be superseded by and shall be consistent with the express provisions of this act, as fully and effectually, to all intents and purposes, as if the same had been herein repeated and specially enacted, mutatis mutandis, with reference to the said duties by this act granted, and the said schedule annexed to the said act of the fifty-fifth year of the reign of King George III and the said schedule to this act annexed shall be read and construed as one schedule and as one act.

3. Provided always, and be it enacted, that nothing in this act or in the schedule hereto annexed contained shall extend or be deemed or construed to extend to charge with stamp-duty any deed or instrument which by any act or acts now in force is expressly exempted from all stamp-duty; or to subject or charge any transfer or assignment of any share in the stock and funds of the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, or of the South Sea Company, or of the East India Company respectively, to or with any higher or other stamp-duty than such transfers and assignments are respectively subject and liable to under any act or acts now in force.

4. That the duties imposed by the said act of the 5 & 6 Vict. [c. 82.] upon any lease, release, or deed, minute, memorandum, or legal or equitable article or instrument for settling or demising lands, tenements, or hereditaments in Ireland, in the manner in the said act mentioned, and also the duty imposed by an act passed in the 9 & 10 Vict., [c. 112.] intitled "An Act to facilitate and encourage the granting of certain Leases for Terms of Years in Ireland," on any lease in the said last-mentioned act described, shall, so far as the same respectively relate to any such lease, release, or deed, minute or memorandum, article or instrument as aforesaid which shall bear date after the said 10th October, 1850, be and the same are hereby repealed; and every such lease, release, or deed, minute, memorandum, or legal or equitable article or instrument last mentioned shall be and become subject and liable to and chargeable with the duties imposed by this act and the said act of the fifty-fifth year of the reign of King George III respectively, on deeds and instruments of the like kind or description.

5. And whereas by an act passed in the seventh year of her Majesty's reign the stamp-duty on an agreement or minute, or memorandum of an agreement, under hand only, and in the said last-mentioned act more particularly described, was reduced to the sum of 2s. 6d.: and whereas doubts have arisen as to whether the said reduced duty extends to agreements or other instruments under hand only for settling or demising lands, tenements, or hereditaments in Ireland at a yearly rent not exceeding 50l.: and it is expedient to remove such doubts: be it therefore declared and enacted, that no agreement or minute, memorandum, or legal or equitable article or instrument, under hand only, made or to be made at any time since the 6th June, 1844, and before or upon the 10th October, 1850, for settling or demising lands, tenements, or hereditaments in Ireland at any yearly rent not exceeding 50l., shall be held or deemed to be or to have been subject or liable to any higher amount of stamp-duty than the said reduced duty of 2s. 6d. payable on an agreement or minute, or memorandum of an agreement, under hand only, by virtue of the said act of the seventh year of her Majesty's reign.

6. And whereas under or by virtue of the said several acts hereinbefore recited, or some of them, certain stamp-duties are now payable for or in respect of any bargain and sale, or lease for a year, for vesting the possession of lands or other hereditaments, and enabling the bargainee to take a release of the freehold or inheritance: and whereas by an act passed in the 4 & 6 Vict., [c. 21.] intitled "An Act for rendering a Release as effectual for the Conveyance of Freehold Estates as a Lease and Release by the same Parties," it is provided, that every deed or instrument taking effect under the said last-mentioned act in the manner therein mentioned shall be chargeable with the same amount of stamp-duty as any bargain and sale or lease for a year would have been chargeable with (except progressive duty) if executed to give effect to such deed or instrument, in addition to the stamp-duties which such deed or instrument shall be chargeable with as a release or otherwise under any act or acts relating to stamp-duties: and whereas by an act passed in the 8 & 9 Vict., [c. 106.] intitled "An Act to amend the Law of Real Property," it is enacted, that every deed which by force only of the said last-mentioned act shall be effectual as a grant shall be chargeable with the stamp-duty with which the same deed would have been chargeable in case the same had been a release founded on a lease or bargain and sale for a year, and also with the same stamp-duty (exclusive of progressive duty) with which such lease or bargain and sale for a year would have been chargeable: and whereas it is expedient to repeal the said stamp-duties now payable for or in respect of any such bargain and sale or lease for a year as aforesaid, and also to repeal so much of the said two several acts last mentioned as imposes upon any deed or instrument the said additional stamp-duty as for a bargain and sale or lease for a year: be it therefore enacted, that the said duties now payable for or in respect of any such bargain and sale or lease for a year as aforesaid, and also so much of the said two several last-mentioned acts as is hereinbefore recited, shall, so far as the same respectively relate to any deed or instrument which shall bear date after the said 10th day of October, 1850, be and the same are hereby repealed.

7. And whereas by the said recited act of the fifty-fifth year of the reign of King George III, and the schedule thereto annexed, it is provided, that where any freehold lands or hereditaments shall be conveyed by a deed of feoffment or by a deed of bargain and sale inrolled, such deed of feoffment or bargain and sale, unless accompanied with a lease and release, shall be charged with such further duty as in the said last-mentioned schedule is specified and contained in that behalf: be it enacted, that so much of the said last-mentioned act and of the said schedule as charges such deed of feoffment or bargain and sale with any such further duty shall, as to any such deed as aforesaid which shall bear date at any time after the 10th day of October, 1850, be and the same is hereby repealed.

8. That if any person shall have received or gotten into his hands, or shall receive or get into his hands, any sum or sums of money as and for the stamp-duty upon or in respect of any deed, instrument, or transaction, or intended deed, instrument, or transaction, or the duty upon or in respect of any legacy or residue, and shall improperly neglect or omit to appropriate such sum or sums of money to the due payment of such duty, or shall otherwise by or under any means or pretence whatsoever improperly withhold or detain the same, every such person shall be accountable for the amount of such duty or sum or sums of money, and the same shall be a debt from such person to her Majesty, her heirs and successors, and recoverable as such accordingly; and it shall be lawful for the Barons of her Majesty's Court of Exchequer in England, Scotland, or Ireland respectively, upon application to be made for that purpose on behalf of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, upon such affidavit as to such Court may appear sufficient, to grant a rule requiring such person, or his executor or administrator, to shew cause why he should not deliver to the said commissioners an account upon oath of all such duties and sums of money as aforesaid, and why the same should not be forthwith paid to the Receiver-General of Inland Revenue, or to such person as the said commissioners shall appoint or authorise to receive the same; and it shall be lawful for such Court to refer the taking or auditing of any such account to the proper officer of such Court, who shall examine any such person as a debtor or alleged debtor to the Crown, on personal interrogatories, if such Court shall think proper so to do; and it shall be lawful for such Court to make absolute any such rule as aforesaid in every case in which the same may appear to such Court to be proper and necessary, and to enforce by attachment or otherwise the payment of any such duties or sums of money as on such proceedings shall appear to such Court to be due, together with the costs of all such proceedings.

9. And whereas doubts have arisen as to certain stamp-duties in Great Britain and Ireland respectively payable under the said act of the fifty-fifth year of the reign of King George III, the said act of the third year of the reign of King George IV, and the several acts respectively therein recited or mentioned, and the said act of the sixth year of the reign of her present Majesty, or under some or one of the said several acts respectively, upon or in respect of certain deeds or instruments hereinafter mentioned, and it is proper that such doubts should be removed: be it therefore enacted and declared, that any transfer or assignment, disposition or assignment, already made, or which on or before the 10th day of October, 1850, may be made, of any mortgage or wadset or of any other security in the said acts or any of them mentioned, or of the benefit thereof, or of the money or stock thereby secured, shall not, by reason of its containing, either by the mortgagor or by any person entitled to the property mortgaged by descent, devise, or bequest from such mortgagor, any further or additional security for the payment or transfer or re-transfer of such money or stock, or any interest or dividends thereon, or any new covenant, proviso, power, stipulation, or agreement, or other matter whatever, in relation to such money or stock, or the interest or dividends thereon, or by reason of its containing all or any of such matters, be or be deemed to be liable to any further or other duty (except progressive duty) than the duty hereinafter mentioned; that is to say, where no further money or stock has been or shall be added to the principal money or stock already secured, a stamp-duty of 1*l.* 15*s.*, and where any further sum of money or stock has been or shall be added to the principal money or stock already secured, the same stamp-duty only as on a mortgage or wadset for such further sum or stock; and that any deed or instrument, either by the mortgagor or by any person entitled as aforesaid, already made or which may be made as aforesaid, operating or intended to operate as a further charge or as a security for any further or additional money or stock advanced upon any property already comprised in any mortgage or other security, shall not by reason of its containing all or any of the matters aforesaid, in relation to the money or stock previously secured, or the interest or dividends thereon, be deemed to be liable to any further or other stamp-duty than the duty chargeable on an original mortgage for the further or additional money or stock in and by such deed of further charge or security charged or secured, or intended so to be.

10. And whereas numerous leases have been from time to time granted upon or after sales made in consideration of money paid to some other person or persons than the lessor, without stamping such leases with any ad valorem stamp in respect of such pecuniary consideration, the parties to such leases conceiving that the provisions of the several acts now in force requiring the consideration to be set out, and imposing an ad valorem duty thereon, did not apply to any other consideration than that passing between the lessor and lessee; but inasmuch as doubts have arisen on the subject, it is reasonable that such relief as is hereinafter mentioned should be afforded in such cases: be it therefore enacted and declared, that no lease made and executed before the 20th day of March, 1850, shall be adjudged, deemed, or taken to be improperly stamped by reason of there not being an ad valorem stamp impressed thereon for or in respect of any pecuniary consideration which may have been paid or may be therein expressed to be paid by the lessee to any other person or persons than the lessor, and that the seller and the lessee respectively in any such lease, and any attorney, solicitor, writer to the signet, or other person employed in or about the preparation or completion of the same, shall be exempted from all penalties and other liabilities for or by reason of any default in setting forth any such pecuniary consideration as aforesaid.

11. And whereas, by the several acts now in force relating to the stamp-duties as well as by this act, certain stamp-duties called progressive duties are imposed upon deeds and instruments in respect of certain quantities of words contained therein, together with any schedule, receipt, or other matter put or indorsed thereon or annexed thereto: and whereas doubts are entertained whether such progressive duties are chargeable on any deed or instrument in respect of the words contained in any other deed or instrument liable to stamp-duty and duly stamped which may be put or indorsed upon, or annexed to, or referred to in or by such first-mentioned deed or instrument, and it is expedient to remove such doubts: be it therefore declared and enacted, that the said progressive duties shall not be deemed or held to be or to have been imposed or chargeable upon any deed or instrument in respect of the words or any quantity of the words contained in any other deed or instrument liable to stamp-duty and duly stamped which may be or may have been put or indorsed upon or annexed to such first-mentioned deed or instrument, or which may be or may have been in any manner incorporated with or referred to in or by the same.

12. And whereas, for securing the due payment of the stamp-duties imposed by law on deeds and other instruments, it is expedient to alter the terms and conditions on which any such deed or instrument may be stamped after the execution or signing thereof: be it therefore enacted, that where any deed or instrument liable by law to any stamp-duty shall be written on vellum, parchment, or paper, and shall be signed or executed by any person before such vellum, parchment, or paper shall be duly stamped for denoting the payment of the said duty, then and in every such case there shall be due, answered, and paid to her Majesty, her heirs and successors, the whole, or, as the case may be, the deficiency of the stamp-duty payable upon or in respect of such deed or instrument, and there shall also be paid and payable, over and above the said duty or deficiency of duty, by way of penalty, and in lieu of any former penalty imposed or made payable by law in the like case, the sum of 10*l.*: and where the whole amount of the duty or deficiency of duty, as the case may be, to be denoted by the stamp or stamps required to be impressed on such deed or instrument when the same shall be brought to be stamped shall exceed the sum of 10*l.*, there shall be paid by way of penalty, in addition to the said sum of 10*l.*, interest on the said duty or deficiency of duty computed at the rate of 5*l.* per centum per annum from the date or first signing or execution of such deed or instrument; provided, that if such interest shall exceed in amount the said duty or deficiency of duty, then there shall be paid by way of penalty, in addition to the said duty or deficiency of duty, and the said sum of 10*l.*, and in lieu of the said interest, a sum equal to the amount of the said duty or deficiency of duty; and the Commissioners of Inland Revenue are hereby required, upon payment of the said duty or deficiency of duty, and of the said sum or sums hereinbefore directed to be paid by way of penalty, to cause such deed or instrument to be duly stamped with a stamp or stamps for denoting the payment of such duty or deficiency, and also with a stamp for denoting the payment of a penalty, in lieu of the receipt heretofore required by any act to be written or given for such penalty; and no such deed or instrument shall be pleaded or given in evidence, or admitted to be good, useful, or available in law or equity until the same shall be duly stamped in manner aforesaid: provided always, that where it shall appear to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, upon oath or otherwise, to their satisfaction, that any deed or instrument hath not been duly stamped previously to being signed or executed, by reason of accident, mistake, inadvertency, or urgent necessity, and without any wilful design or intention to defraud her Majesty, her heirs or successors, of the duty chargeable in respect thereof, or to evade or delay the payment of such duty, then and in any such case, if such deed or instrument shall within twelve calendar months after the first signing or executing of the same by any person be brought to the said commissioners in order to be stamped, and the stamp-duty chargeable thereon by law shall be paid, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, if they shall think fit, to remit the whole or any part of the penalty payable on stamping such deed or instrument, and to cause such deed or instrument to be duly stamped, upon payment of the whole, or, as the case may be, the deficiency of the stamp-duty chargeable thereon by law, and either with or without any portion of the said penalty; and thereupon every such deed or instrument shall be as valid and available in the law as it would have been if it had been duly stamped before the signing or executing of the same: provided also, that nothing herein contained shall extend or be deemed or construed to extend to any deed or instrument for the stamping of which after the signing or execution thereof provision is specially made by any law now in force, or to any deed or instrument the stamping of which after the signing or execution thereof is expressly prohibited or restricted by any such law as aforesaid, or to repeal, alter, or affect any such provision, prohibition, or restriction.

13. Provided always, and be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the Commissioners of Inland Revenue to order and direct that any deed or instrument which shall have been or shall or may be signed or executed by any party thereto at any place out of the United Kingdom may be duly stamped, upon payment of the proper stamp-duty payable thereon, and without payment of any additional duty or penalty, provided such deed or instrument shall be brought to the said commissioners to be stamped as aforesaid within the space of two calendar months from the time when the same shall have been received in the United Kingdom, and provided proof shall be first made to the satisfaction of the said commissioners of the facts aforesaid.

14. And whereas doubts frequently arise as to the stamp-duties with which some deeds or instruments are chargeable, and it is expedient that provision should be made whereby such doubts may be removed: be it therefore enacted, that when any deed or instrument liable to stamp-duty, whether previously stamped or otherwise, shall be presented to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue at their office, and the party presenting the same shall desire to have the opinion of the said commissioners as to the stamp-duty with which such deed or instrument in their judgment is chargeable; and shall tender and pay to the said commissioners a fee of 10s., (which shall be accounted for and paid over as part of her Majesty's revenue arising from stamp-duties), it shall be lawful for the said commissioners and they are hereby required to assess and charge the stamp-duty to which in their judgment such deed or instrument is liable, and upon payment of the stamp-duty so assessed, and charged by them, or, in the case of a deed or instrument insufficiently stamped, of such a sum as, together with the stamp-duty already paid thereon, shall be equal to the duty so assessed and charged, and upon payment also of the amount, if any, payable by way of penalty on stamping such deed or instrument, to stamp such deed or instrument with the proper stamp or stamps denoting the amount of the duty so paid, and thereupon, or if the full stamp-duty to which in the judgment of the said commissioners such deed or instrument shall be liable shall have been previously paid and denoted upon the same in manner aforesaid, the said commissioners shall impress upon such deed or instrument a particular stamp to be provided by them for that purpose, with such word or words or device or symbol thereon as they shall think proper in that behalf, and such last-mentioned stamp shall be deemed and taken to signify and denote that the full amount of stamp-duty with which such deed or instrument is by law chargeable has been paid, and every deed or instrument upon which the same shall be impressed shall be deemed to have been duly stamped, and shall be receivable in evidence in all courts of law or equity, notwithstanding any objection made to the same as being insufficiently stamped; save and except that such last-mentioned stamp shall not be impressed upon any deed or instrument chargeable with ad valorem duty under or by reference to the head of "Bond" or "Mortgage" in the schedule to this act where the same is made as a security for the payment or transfer or re-transfer of money or stock without any limit as to the amount thereof; and provided always, that nothing herein contained shall be deemed or construed to extend to require or authorise the said commissioners to stamp as last aforesaid any probate of a will or letters of administration, or to stamp as last aforesaid any deed or instrument after the signing or execution thereof in any case in which the stamping thereof is expressly prohibited by any law in force.

15. Provided always, and be it enacted, that if the party presenting such deed or instrument to the said commissioners as aforesaid for their opinion as to the stamp-duty with which the same is chargeable shall declare himself dissatisfied with the determination made by them in that behalf, it shall be lawful for such party, upon paying the amount of the stamp-duty according to such determination, and depositing with the said commissioners the sum of 40s. for costs and charges to be paid by him in the event hereinafter provided for, to require the said commissioners to state specially and to sign the case on which the question with respect to such stamp-duty arose, together with their determination thereupon, which case the said commissioners are hereby required to state and sign accordingly, and to cause the same to be delivered to the party making such request as aforesaid in order that he may appeal against such determination to her Majesty's Court of Exchequer at Westminster; and upon the application of the said party (due notice thereof being given to the solicitor of inland revenue to the end that counsel may be heard on behalf of the said commissioners) it shall be lawful for the said Court of Exchequer and the said Court is hereby required to hear and determine the said appeal, and to decide as to the stamp-duty with which such deed or instrument is chargeable, and according to such decision the stamp-duty and penalty (if any) which shall have been the subject of such case shall be deemed to have been payable by law; and if no excess of stamp-duty or penalty shall have been paid to the said commissioners by the said appellant, over and above the sum which according to the decision of the said Court ought to have been paid upon or in respect of such deed or instrument, the said sum of 40s. deposited for costs and charges as aforesaid shall be applied to the use of her Majesty's revenue; but if any such excess as aforesaid shall have been so paid by the said appellant, the same, together with the said sum of 40s. deposited as aforesaid, shall be repaid by the said commissioners to the said appellant; and if the sum paid or stamp-duty or penalty upon or in respect of such deed or instrument shall fall short of the amount which, according to the decision of the said Court upon any such appeal, is chargeable or ought to be paid upon or in respect of such deed or instrument, the deficiency of such stamp-duty or penalty, or both, as the case may be, shall be paid by the said appellant to the said commissioners, and the Court shall order and enforce the payment thereof accordingly.

16. That where any lands or other property shall have been actually and bonâ fide contracted to be sold prior to the 20th day of March, 1850, by any contract or agreement in writing duly stamped, or shall have been actually and bonâ fide sold under the decree of any Court made prior to the said 20th day of March, and the same shall be conveyed to the purchaser or any other person by his direction after the 10th day of October, and before or on the 31st day of March, 1851, or where any lands or other property shall have been actually and bonâ fide contracted to be mortgaged prior to the said 20th day of March, 1850, and the abstract of title of the mortgagor to such lands or other property shall have been actually delivered to the intended mortgagee or his solicitor prior to the said 20th day of March, 1850, and the same mortgage shall be executed after the said 10th day of October, and before or on the 31st day of March, 1851, or where any deed or instrument liable to the ad valorem duty by this act granted under the head of "Settlement" in the schedule to this act shall be executed after the said 10th day of October, and before or on the 31st day of March, 1851, in pursuance of an obligation contained in any deed, will, or other instrument which was actually and bonâ fide in force and obligatory upon the party executing the same prior to the said 20th day of March, 1850, or in pursuance of the decree of any Court made prior to that day, the principal or only deed or instrument whereby such lands or other property as aforesaid shall be conveyed or mortgaged respectively, and the principal or only deed chargeable with ad valorem duty by this act granted under the head of "Settlement" in the schedule hereto, shall be exempt from any ad valorem duty of a greater amount than would have been payable on such deed or instrument respectively if this act had not been passed; but in order to prevent frauds such deed or instrument shall be produced on or before the 30th day of April, 1851, duly executed and duly stamped, to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, and upon its being proved to their satisfaction that the lands or other property therein comprised were actually and bonâ fide contracted to be sold as aforesaid, or were actually and bonâ fide sold under the decree of any Court made prior to the said 20th day of March, 1850, or that such lands or other property therein comprised were actually and bonâ fide contracted to be mortgaged as aforesaid, and that the abstract of title thereto was actually delivered as aforesaid, or that such deed or instrument liable to the ad valorem duty by this act, granted under the head of "Settlement" in the schedule to this act, was executed in pursuance of an obligation contained in such deed, will, or other instrument so in force and obligatory as aforesaid, or was actually and bonâ fide executed in pursuance of the decree of any Court made prior to the said 20th day of March, 1850, and that such deed or instrument was duly executed on or before the 31st day of March, 1851, the said Commissioners of Inland Revenue, or some or one of them, shall sign a certificate of what shall be so proved to their satisfaction upon such deed or instrument, and thereupon such deed or instrument, being stamped with the ad valorem duty which would have been payable if this act had not been passed, shall be as valid and available in the law as if the same had been stamped with the said ad valorem duty by this act granted, but the same shall not without such certificate be given in evidence, or be in any manner available, unless stamped with such ad valorem duty last mentioned.

17. And whereas it is considered that under the provisions of an act passed in the 1 & 2 Geo. 4, [c. 55,] intitled "An Act to remove Doubts as to the Amount of Stamp-duties to be paid on Deeds and other Instruments under the several Acts in Force in Great Britain and Ireland respectively," any deed, agreement, or other instrument which relates wholly to real or personal property in Ireland, or to any matter or thing (other than the payment of money) to be done in Ireland, cannot after the ingrossing thereof properly be stamped elsewhere than at the Stamp-office in Dublin, and also that any deed, agreement, or other instrument which relates to any real or personal property situate elsewhere than in Ireland, or to any matter or thing (other than the payment of money) to be done elsewhere than in Ireland, cannot after the ingrossing thereof properly be stamped elsewhere than at the Stamp-office in London: and whereas such construction of the said act as aforesaid is the occasion of inconvenience: be it therefore enacted and declared, that from and after the passing of this act any such deed, agreement, or instrument as aforesaid may and shall, without regard to the place where the property, matter, or thing to which the same may relate may be situate or may be to be done, be stamped with such duty or duties as the same may be liable to, either at the Stamp-office in London or at the Stamp-office in Dublin, according as the same shall for that purpose be presented at either of the said offices.

18. And whereas by an act passed in the 12 & 13 Vict., [c. 80.] intituled "An Act to repeal the Allowances on the Purchase of Stamps, and for the receiving and accounting for the Duties on Gold and Silver Plate, and to grant other Allowances in Lieu thereof," an allowance at the rate of 1*l.* 10*s.* per cent. is granted to any person who shall produce at the office of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue in London or Dublin to be stamped, or shall purchase of the said commissioners at their office in London, Edinburgh, or Dublin, vellum, parchment, or paper stamped with stamps (not being labels for medicines) under the value respectively of 10*l.* each, but to the amount or value in the whole of 30*l.* or upwards: and whereas it is expedient to repeal the said allowance so far as relates to stamps for receipts, and to grant another and increased rate of allowance in lieu thereof: be it therefore enacted, that from and after the passing of this act the said allowance granted by the said last-mentioned act, so far as the same relates to stamps for receipts, shall be and the same is hereby repealed, and that in lieu thereof there shall be made and granted the allowance following; that is to say, to any person who at one and the same time shall produce at the office of the said commissioners in London or Dublin paper to be stamped with stamps for receipts to the amount of 5*l.* or upwards, or shall purchase at the office of the said commissioners in London, Edinburgh, or Dublin stamps for receipts to the amount of 5*l.* or upwards, or of any distributor or sub-distributor of stamps at any place not within the distance of ten miles from the said offices respectively to the amount of 1*l.* or upwards, an allowance at and after the rate of 7*l.* 10*s.* per cent., provided that no such allowance shall be made for any fraction of 1*l.*

19. And whereas by an act passed in the 55 Geo. 3, [c. 101.] intituled "An Act to regulate the Collection of Stamp-duties on Matters in Respect of which Licences may be granted by the Commissioners of Stamps in Ireland," it is enacted, that the said commissioners shall annually grant a licence for insuring houses, furniture, goods, wares, merchandise, or other property from loss by fire to all and every body and bodies politic or corporate or person or persons applying for the same in manner therein mentioned, and that where the business of insurance is carried on by a company consisting of a greater number than four the said licence shall be granted to such two or more of such company or partners, or if such company or partnership shall be a British company or partnership, then to such agent or agents resident in Ireland as shall be named to the said commissioners; and that no person or persons or body or bodies politic or corporate shall insure, or open or keep any office in Ireland for insuring houses, furniture, goods, wares, merchandise, or other property from loss by fire, without having first taken out and continuing to take out annually a licence for that purpose; and it is also enacted, that all and every person and persons and body or bodies politic or corporate to whom any such licence as aforesaid shall be granted shall at the time of receiving such licence give such security, with sufficient sureties, to be approved of by the said Commissioners of Stamps, by bond to his Majesty, conditioned for making out, signing, and delivering the accounts of all monies received for duties upon such insurances, and payment of the same, as therein mentioned: and whereas under and by virtue of an act passed in the 6 & 7 Will. 4, [c. 28.] intituled "An Act to enable Persons to make Deposits of Stock or Exchequer Bills in Lieu of giving Security by Bond to the Postmaster-General and Commissioners of Land Revenue, Customs, Excise, Stamps, and Taxes," and of an act passed in the 1 & 2 Vict., [c. 61.] for amending the said last-mentioned act, any person from whom any security is required in respect of any matter relating to the revenues of the Post-office, land revenues, customs, excise, stamps, or taxes, is enabled, in lieu of giving such security by bond, to give the same by transfer of stock or deposit of Exchequer bills, as therein mentioned: and whereas the giving of security every year by persons in Ireland insuring property from loss or damage by fire on taking out a licence for that purpose is attended with great inconvenience, and it is expedient to provide a remedy for the same: be it therefore enacted, that every licence which shall be hereafter granted for insuring houses, furniture, goods, wares, merchandise, or other property from loss by fire, under the said act passed in the fifty-fifth year of the reign of King George III, shall endure and remain in force from the day of the date thereof for and during all such time as the body politic or corporate to which the same shall be granted, or the person or persons therein named, or any of them, shall continue to insure or carry on the business of fire insurance, or, in the case of a company in Ireland not incorporate, so long as the persons named in the licence shall be members or partners or a member or partner of the company named or described in such licence, and as for the whole of which the same shall have been granted, anything in any of the said recited acts or in any other act contained to the contrary notwithstanding: provided always, that every person and body politic or corporate to whom any such licence as aforesaid shall be granted shall give security by bond to her Majesty, her heirs and successors, in such sum as the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, or their proper officer in that behalf in Ireland, shall think proper, with sufficient sureties, to the satisfaction of the said commissioners or officer, or by transfer of stock or deposit of Exchequer bills, in pursuance of the said recited acts in that behalf, for duly and faithfully keeping, making out, signing, and delivering, in the manner required by any act of Parliament relating thereto, all and every the accounts by any such act required to be kept, made out, signed, and delivered by persons and bodies politic or corporate to whom licence is granted for insuring houses, furniture, goods, wares, merchandise, or other property from loss by fire, and for duly and faithfully paying, as required by any such act, the duties which shall appear to be due on such accounts respectively, and for truly and faithfully observing and performing all the directions, matters, and things contained in the said acts, on the part of such licensed person or body politic or corporate to be observed and performed; and every such security to be given under any of the said acts, whether by bond, or transfer or deposit of stock or Exchequer bills, and in the case of any such transfer or deposit in or into whose name or names soever, together with the name of the chairman of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue for the time being, the stock or Exchequer bills shall be or be transferred or deposited, shall continue and be a security for the due performance of all things required as aforesaid, not only during all such time as the licence to which the same shall relate shall be in force, but, in the case of bodies politic or corporate or companies not incorporate in Ireland, during all such time as the body politic or corporate or the company not incorporate named or described in such licence shall insure any such property from loss by fire, or shall carry on the business of such insurance, whether any such licence shall be in force or not, or otherwise, according to the conditions of any such bond, or the terms or conditions of any declaration relating to any such stock or Exchequer bills; and such stock or Exchequer bills may, when the security for which the same was or were transferred or deposited shall be no longer necessary, be transferred or delivered up to any of the persons who for the time being shall be a partner or member or partners or members of the company for or on whose behalf the same was or was transferred or deposited, or otherwise, according to the terms, if any, in that behalf mentioned and contained in any such declaration as the said chairman for the time being shall think proper: provided always, that every such security shall be renewed from time to time as often as any such bond shall become forfeited, or any of the parties thereto shall die, or become bankrupt or insolvent, or reside in parts beyond the sea, and also as often as the said commissioners or their said officer shall think fit, and in such amount as they or the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall direct, whether the same shall be by bond or transfer or deposit as aforesaid; and in the event of any neglect or refusal to renew the same, when required by this act, or by the said Commissioners of Inland Revenue or their said officer, it shall be lawful for the said last-mentioned commissioners to revoke the licence which shall have been granted to the body politic or corporate, or company, or person or persons, neglecting or refusing to renew such security, to insure property from loss by fire, and thenceforth such licence shall cease and determine.

20. And in order to avoid the frequent use of diverse terms and expressions, and to prevent any misconstruction of the terms and expressions used in this or any other act relating to stamp-duties, be it enacted, that wherever in this act or in any other such act as aforesaid, with reference to any person, offence, matter, or thing, any word or words is or are or have been or shall be used importing the singular number or the masculine gender only, yet such words shall be understood to include several persons as well as one person, females as well as males, bodies politic or corporate as well as individuals, and several matters or things as well as one matter or thing, unless it be otherwise specially provided, or there be something in the subject or context repugnant to such construction; and that wherever the several words, terms, or expressions following are or shall be used in this act or in any other such act as aforesaid, with reference to any deed or instrument, they shall be construed respectively in the manner hereinafter directed, that is to say, the word "write" or the word "written" shall be respectively deemed to mean and include the several words "print" or "printed," or "partly write and partly print," or "partly written and partly printed," as well as "write" or "written."

21. That this act may be amended or repealed by any act to be passed in this present session of Parliament.

The SCHEDULE referred to,
CONTAINING

THE DUTIES GRANTED BY THIS ACT.

AGREEMENT, or any minute or memorandum of agreement, made in England or Ireland under hand only, or made in Scotland without any clause of registration, (not charged otherwise than under the head "Agreement" in the schedule to the act 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, nor expressly exempted from all stamp-duty), where the matter thereof shall be of the value of 20*l.* or upwards, whether the same shall be only evidence of a contract, or obligatory upon the parties from its being a written instrument, together with every schedule, receipt, or other matter put or indorsed thereon or annexed thereto £0 2 6

And where the same shall contain 2160 words or upwards, then for every entire quantity of 1080 words contained therein, over and above the first 1080 words, a further progressive duty of 0 2 6

Not exceeding 50*l.* £0 1 3

Exceeding 50*l.* and not exceeding 100*l.* 0 2 6

Exceeding 100*l.* and not exceeding 150*l.* 0 3 9

Exceeding 150*l.* and not exceeding 200*l.* 0 5 0

Exceeding 200*l.* and not exceeding 250*l.* 0 6 8

And where the same shall exceed 300*l.*, then for every 100*l.* and also for any fractional part of 100*l.* 0 2 6

BOND in England or Ireland, and personal bond in Scotland, given as a security for the repayment of any sum or sums of money to be thereafter lent, advanced, or paid, or which may become due upon an account current, together with any sum already advanced or due, or without, as the case may be;

Where the money secured or to be ultimately recoverable thereupon shall be limited not to exceed a given sum—the same duty as on a bond for such limited sum.

And where the total amount of the money secured or to be ultimately recoverable thereupon shall be uncertain, and without any limit—the same duty as on a bond for a sum equal to the amount of the penalty of such bond.

And where there shall be no penalty of the bond in such last-mentioned case, such bond shall be available for such an amount only as the ad valorem duty denoted by any stamp or stamps thereon will extend to cover.

BOND in England or Ireland, and personal bond in Scotland, given as a security for the transfer or re-transfer of any share in any of the Government or Parliamentary stocks or funds, or in the stock and funds of the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, or of the Bank of Ireland, or of the East India Company, or of the South Sea Company, or of any other company or corporation—the same ad valorem duty as on a bond for a sum of money equal to the value of the stock or fund secured, according to the average price thereof on the day of the date of the bond, or on either of the ten days preceding, or if there shall not have been any known sale on any of such days, then on the latest day preceding on which there shall have been a known sale.

Heritable bond in Scotland for any of the purposes aforesaid. See "Mortgage."

BOND in England or Ireland, and personal bond in Scotland, given as a security for the payment of any sum of money, or for the transfer or re-transfer of any share in any of the stocks or funds before mentioned, which shall be secured also by a mortgage or wadset, or other instrument or writing hereinafter charged with and which shall have paid the same duty as a mortgage or wadset, or for the performance of covenants contained in such mortgage or other instrument or writing, or for both those purposes, provided such mortgage, wadset, or other instrument or writing shall bear even date with and be referred to in such bond;

Where the sum of money or the value of the stock or funds secured shall not exceed 800*l.*—the same ad valorem duty as on a mortgage or wadset for securing the like amount or value.

And where such sum of money or value shall exceed 800*l.* £1 0 0

BOND in England or Ireland, and personal or heritable bond in Scotland, given as an additional or further security for the payment of any sum or sums of money, or for the transfer or re-transfer of any share in any of the stocks or funds before mentioned, previously secured by a bond, mortgage, or other security therein referred to, and which shall have paid the proper ad valorem duty on bonds or mortgages imposed by law at the date thereof;

Where the sum of money or the value of the stock or funds secured shall not exceed 1400*l.*—the same ad valorem duty as on a bond or mortgage for securing the like sum or value.

And where such sum of money or the value of the stock or funds secured shall exceed 1400*l.* £1 15 0

BOND.—Any transfer or assignment, disposition or assignation of any such bond as aforesaid, and which shall have paid the proper ad valorem duty on bonds;

Where the principal money or stock secured by the bond shall not exceed in amount or value in the whole the sum of 1400*l.*—the same duty as on a bond for the total amount or value of such principal money or stock.

And in every other case such transfer, assignment, disposition, or assignation shall be chargeable with the duty of £1 15 0

And see "Progressive Duty."

BOND in England or Ireland, and personal or heritable bond in Scotland, given as the only or principal security for the payment of any annuity upon the original creation and sale thereof—the same ad valorem duty as on a conveyance upon sale in consideration of the sum or value given or agreed to be given for the purchase of such annuity.

For the duty payable, see "Conveyance" upon the sale of property.

BOND in England or Ireland, and personal bond in Scotland, given as a collateral or auxiliary security for the payment of any annuity upon the original creation and sale thereof, where the same shall be granted or conveyed or secured by any other deed or instrument liable to and charged with the ad valorem duty imposed by law on conveyances upon the sale of any property;

Where such ad valorem duty shall not exceed 20*s.*, such bond shall be chargeable with a stamp-duty of equal amount with the said ad valorem duty.

And where such ad valorem duty shall exceed 20*s.*, such bond shall be chargeable with the duty of £1 0 0

BOND in England or Ireland, and personal or heritable bond in Scotland, given as a security for the payment of any annuity, (except upon the original creation and sale thereof), or of any sum or sums of money at stated periods, (not being interest for any principal sum, nor rent reserved or payable upon any lease or tack), for any definite and certain term; so that the total amount of the money to be paid can be previously ascertained—the same ad valorem duty as on a bond of the like nature for the payment of a sum of money equal to such total amount.

BOND in England or Ireland, and personal or heritable bond in Scotland, given as a security for the payment of any annuity, (except as aforesaid), or of any sum or sums of money at stated periods, (not being interest for any principal sum, nor rent reserved or payable upon any lease or tack), for the term of life or any other indefinite period, so that the whole money to be paid cannot be previously ascertained;

Where the annuity or sum secured shall not exceed 50*l.* per annum £1 0 0

And where the same shall exceed 50*l.*, and not exceed 100*l.* per annum 2 0 0

And where the same shall exceed 100*l.* per annum, then for every 100*l.* per annum and also for any fractional part of 100*l.* per annum 2 0 0

But where there shall be both a personal and heritable bond in Scotland in separate deeds of the same date for securing any such annuity or sums payable at stated periods, and the ad valorem duty above charged thereon shall amount to 2*l.* or upwards, the heritable bond only shall be charged with the ad valorem duty, and the personal bond shall be charged only with a duty of 1 0 0

BOND of any kind or description given for any other purpose than as aforesaid—the duty chargeable thereon by any act or acts now in force.

Provided always, and it is hereby declared, that no such bond as last mentioned shall be charged or chargeable under this or any other act or acts with any greater amount of stamp-duty than the ad valorem duty hereinbefore charged upon a bond given for the payment of a definite and certain sum of money of the same amount as the penalty of such bond.

And in all the said several cases of BOND, see “Progressive Duty.”

CHARTER of resignation, or of confirmation, or of novodamus, or upon apprising, or upon a decret of adjudication or sale of any lands, or other heritable subjects in Scotland, holden of any subject superior £0 5 0

And where the same shall contain 2160 words or upwards, then for every entire quantity of 1080 words contained therein over and above the first 1080 words, a further progressive duty of 0 5 0

CONVEYANCE, whether grant, disposition, lease, assignment, transfer, release, renunciation, or of any other kind or description whatsoever, upon the sale of any lands, tenements, rents, annuities, or other property—that is to say, for and in respect of the principal or only deed, instrument, or writing whereby the lands or other things sold shall be granted, leased, assigned, transferred, released, renounced, or otherwise conveyed to or vested in the purchaser or purchasers, or any other person or persons by his, her, or their direction;

Where the purchase or consideration money therein or thereupon expressed shall not exceed 25*l.* £0 2 6

And where the same shall exceed 25*l.* and not exceed 50*l.* 0 5 0

And where the same shall exceed 50*l.* and not exceed 75*l.* 0 7 6

And where the same shall exceed 100*l.* and not exceed 125*l.* 0 12 6

And where the same shall exceed 200*l.* and not exceed 225*l.* 1 2 6

And where the same shall exceed 225*l.* and not exceed 250*l.* 1 5 0

And where the same shall exceed 250*l.* and not exceed 275*l.* 1 7 6

And where the purchase or consideration money shall exceed 600*l.*, then for every 100*l.* and also for any fractional part of 100*l.* 0 10 0

And it is hereby directed, that the purchase-money or consideration shall be truly expressed and set forth in words at length in or upon every such principal or only deed or instrument of conveyance; and where such consideration shall consist either wholly or in part of any stock or security, the value thereof respectively, to be ascertained as hereinafter mentioned, shall also be truly expressed and set forth in manner aforesaid in or upon every such deed or instrument; and such value shall be deemed and taken to be the purchase or consideration money, or part of the purchase or consideration money, as the case may be, in respect whereof the ad valorem duty shall be charged as aforesaid.

And where the consideration or any part of the consideration shall be any stock in any of the public funds, or any Government debenture or stock of the Bank of England or Bank of Ireland, or any debenture or stock of any corporation, company, society, or persons or person, payable only at the will of the debtor, the said duty shall be calculated (taking the same respectively, whether constituting the whole or a part only of such consideration) according to the average selling price thereof respectively on the day or on either of the ten days preceding the day of the date of the deed or instrument of conveyance, or if no sale shall have taken place within such ten days, then according to the average selling price thereof on the day of the last preceding sale; and if such consideration or part of such consideration shall be a mortgage, judgment, or bond, or a debenture, the amount whereof shall be recoverable by the holder, or any other security whatsoever, whether payable in money or otherwise, then such calculation shall be made according to the sum due thereon for both principal and interest.

And see “Progressive Duty.”

COPYHOLD ESTATES and Customary Estates passing by surrender and admittance, or by admittance only, and not by deed: instruments relating thereto upon the sale or mortgage of any such estates; that is to say—

Any admittance out of court, or the memorandum thereof, or the copy of court roll of any admittance in court £0 2 6

And where the same shall contain 2160 words or upwards, then for every entire quantity of 1080 words contained therein over and above the first 1080 words, a further progressive duty of 0 2 6

COUNTERPART. See “Duplicate.”

COVENANT.—Any separate deed of covenant made on the sale or mortgage of any freehold, leasehold, copyhold, or customary estate, or of any right or interest therein (the same not being a deed chargeable with ad valorem duty under the head of “Conveyance” in this Schedule) for the conveyance, assignment, surrender, or release of such estate, right, or interest, or for the title to, or quiet enjoyment, freedom from incumbrances, or further assurance of, the same estate, right, or interest, or otherwise by way of indemnity in respect of the same, or for the production of the title-deeds or muniments of title relating thereto, or for all or any of those purposes;

Where the ad valorem duty on the purchase-money or consideration or on the mortgage-money shall not exceed the sum of 10s.—a duty equal to the amount of such ad valorem duty.

And where the same shall exceed that amount .. £0 10 0
And see "Progressive Duty."

COVENANT.—Any deed containing a covenant for the payment or repayment of any sum or sums of money, or for the transfer or re-transfer of any share or shares in the Government or Parliamentary stocks or funds, or in the stock and funds of the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, or of the Bank of Ireland, or of the East India Company, or of the South Sea Company, or of any other company or corporation, in any case where a mortgage, if made for the like purpose, would be chargeable under this Schedule with any ad valorem duty exceeding in amount the sum of 1l. 15s.; or for the payment of any annuity, or any sums at stated periods in any case where a bond for the like purpose would be chargeable with any such duty—the same ad valorem duty as on a mortgage or bond respectively for the like purpose.

For the duty thereon, see "Bond" or Mortgage."

And see "Progressive Duty."

Provided always, that where any covenant shall be made as an additional or further security for the payment or repayment, transfer or re-transfer of any sum or sums of money, or any share or shares in any of the said stocks or funds, or for the payment of any annuity or sums at stated periods, at the same time or already or previously secured by any bond or other instrument mentioned and referred to by the deed containing such covenant, and chargeable with and which shall have paid the proper ad valorem duty under the head of "Bond" or "Mortgage," or (as respects any annuity) under the head of "Conveyance," respectively in this Schedule, or under any act or acts in force at the date thereof, in respect of the same sum or sums, share or shares, the said ad valorem duty hereby charged shall not be payable upon or in respect of such covenant; and if required for the sake of evidence the deed containing such covenant shall, on the same and such bond or other instrument being produced duly stamped in other respects, be stamped with a particular stamp for denoting or testifying the payment of the ad valorem duty hereby charged.

Exemption from the preceding ad valorem Duty, but not from any other Duty to which the same may be liable.

Any covenant contained in any deed chargeable with any duty under the head of "Mortgage" in this Schedule, or in any deed exempted from the ad valorem duty on mortgages by the act 3 Geo. 4, c. 117, such deeds hereby exempted operating as a security by way of mortgage, or as a transfer, assignment, disposition, or assignation hereinafter charged for the same sum or sums of money, or share or shares in any of the said stocks or funds, which is or are the subject of such covenant.

Also any covenant contained in any deed chargeable with any duty under the head of "Settlement" in this Schedule, in respect of the same sum or sums of money, or share or shares in any of the said stocks or funds, which is or are the subject of such covenant.

DUPLICATE OR COUNTERPART of any deed or instrument, of any description whatever, chargeable with any stamp-duty or duties, either under this schedule or any other act or acts now in force;

Where such stamp-duty or duties chargeable as aforesaid (exclusive of progressive duty) shall not amount to the sum of 5s.—the same duty or duties as shall be chargeable on the original deed or instrument, including the progressive duty thereon (if any).

And where the same (exclusive as aforesaid) shall amount to the sum of 5s. or upwards £0 5 0

And where in the latter case any such deed or instrument, together with any schedule, receipt, or other matter put or indorsed thereon or annexed thereto, shall contain 2160 words or upwards, then for every entire quantity of 1080 words contained therein, over and above the first 1080 words, such duplicate or counterpart shall be charged with the further progressive duty of 0 2 6

Provided always, that in such latter case the duplicate or counterpart shall not be available unless stamped with a particular stamp for denoting or testifying the payment of the full and proper stamp-duty on the original deed or instrument, which said particular stamp shall be impressed upon such duplicate or counterpart, on the same being produced, together with the original deed or instrument, and on the whole being duly executed and duly stamped in all other respects.

LEASE OR TACK of any lands, tenements, hereditaments, or heritable subjects, granted in consideration of a sum of money by way of fine, premium, or grassum paid for the same, without any yearly rent, or with any yearly rent under 20l.—the same duty as for a conveyance on the sale of lands for a sum of money of the same amount.

For the duty thereon, see "Conveyance."

(Save and except leases and tacks for a life or lives not exceeding three, or for a term of years determinable with a life or lives not exceeding three, by whomsoever granted, and leases for a term absolute not exceeding twenty-one years, granted by ecclesiastical corporations, aggregate or sole, where the duties on such leases and tacks respectively would, under the provisions of this act, amount to 1l. 15s. or upwards).

LEASE OR TACK of any lands, tenements, hereditaments, or heritable subjects at a yearly rent, without any sum of money by way of fine, premium, or grassum paid for the same;

Where the yearly rent shall not exceed 5l. £0 0 6

And where the same shall exceed 5l. and not exceed 10l. 0 1 0

And where the same shall exceed 10l. and not exceed 15l. 0 1 6

And where the same shall exceed 15l. and not exceed 20l. 0 2 0

And where the same shall exceed 20l. and not exceed 25l. 0 2 6

And where the same shall exceed 25l. and not exceed 50l. 0 5 0

And where the same shall exceed 50l. and not exceed 75l. 0 7 6

And where the same shall exceed 75l. and not exceed 100l. 0 10 0

And where the same shall exceed 100l., then for every 50l. and also for any fractional part of 50l. 0 5 0

LEASE OR TACK of any lands, tenements, hereditaments, or heritable subjects, granted in consideration of a sum of money by way of fine, premium, or grassum, and also of a yearly rent amounting to 20l. or upwards—both the ad valorem duties payable for a lease in consideration of a fine only and for a lease in consideration of a rent only of the same amount.

(Save and except the leases and tacks hereinbefore excepted).

LEASE OR TACK of any mine or minerals or other property of a like nature, either with or without any other lands, tenements, hereditaments, or heritable subjects, where any portion of the produce of such mines or minerals shall be reserved to be paid in money or kind;

If it shall be stipulated that the value of such portion of the produce shall amount at least to a given sum per annum, or if such value shall be limited not to exceed a given sum per annum, to be specified in such lease or tack, then the said ad valorem duty on leases shall be charged in respect of the highest of such sums so given or limited for any year during the term of such lease or tack.

And where any yearly sum shall be reserved in addition to or together with such produce, relative to the yearly amount or value of which produce there shall be no such stipulation or limitation as aforesaid, the said ad valorem duty shall be charged in respect of such yearly sum.

And where both a certain yearly sum and also such produce relative to the yearly amount or value of which there shall be such stipulation or limitation as aforesaid shall be reserved, the said ad valorem duty shall be charged on the aggregate of such yearly sum and also of the highest yearly amount or value of such produce.

GENERAL REGULATIONS as to Leases and Tacks:

Where, in any of the aforesaid several cases of lease or tack, any fine, premium, or grassum, or any rent, payable under any lease or tack, shall consist wholly or in part of corn, grain, or victual, the value of such corn, grain, or victual shall be ascertained or estimated at and after any permanent rate of conversion which the lessee may be specially charged with, or have it in his option to pay; and if no such permanent rate of conversion shall have been stipulated, then in England and Ireland respectively at and after the prices, upon an average of twelve calendar months preceding the 1st day of January next before the date of such lease or tack, of the average prices of British corn published in the London Gazette in the manner directed by any act in force for the commutation of tithes in England and Wales; and in Scotland at and after the fairs prices of the county in which the lands or any part thereof lie, upon an average of seven years preceding the date of such lease or tack; and such respective values shall be deemed and taken to be the fine, premium, or grassum, or yearly rent, or part thereof respectively, as the case may be, in respect whereof the ad valorem duty shall be charged as aforesaid.

And where separate and distinct fines, premiums, or grassums shall be paid to several lessors, being joint tenants, tenants in common, or coparceners, in England or Ireland, or proprietors pro indiviso in Scotland, who shall by one and the same deed or instrument jointly or severally demise or lease the lands, tenements, hereditaments, or heritable subjects of which they are such joint tenants, tenants in common, or coparceners, in England or Ireland, or proprietors pro indiviso in Scotland, or where separate and distinct rents shall be by one and the same deed or instrument reserved or made payable, or agreed to be reserved or made payable, to the lessor or to several lessors, being such joint tenants, tenants in common, or coparceners, in England or Ireland, or proprietors pro indiviso in Scotland, the ad valorem duties shall be charged in respect of the aggregate amount of such fines, premiums, or grassums, and of such rents respectively.

And where any person, having contracted for, but not having obtained, a lease of any lands or other property, shall contract to sell such lands or other property, or any part thereof, or his right or interest therein or thereto, to any other person, and a lease shall accordingly be granted to such other person, the purchase-money or consideration which shall be paid or given or agreed to be paid or given to the person immediately selling to such lessee shall be set forth in such lease, and such lease shall be charged as well with the said ad valorem duty on such purchase-money or consideration as with the duty on the purchase-money or consideration or rent paid or reserved to the lessor.

LEASE or TACK, of any kind, not otherwise charged £1 15 0

Provided always, that no ad valorem duty shall be chargeable in respect of any penal rent, or increased rent in the nature of a penal rent, reserved in any such lease or tack as aforesaid.

LEASE.—Any assignment or surrender of a lease or tack upon any other occasion than a sale or mortgage—a duty equal to the ad valorem duty with which a similar lease or tack would be chargeable under this act.

Provided always, that where a similar lease or tack would be chargeable under this act with any stamp-duty amounting to 1*l.* 15*s.* or upwards, then such assignment or surrender shall be chargeable only with a duty of . . . £1 15 0

Provided also, that no stamp-duty, except the said ad valorem duty, shall be chargeable for or in respect of any lease, whether in possession, reversion, or remainder, expressed to be granted in consideration of the surrender of an existing lease and also of a sum of money.

And in all the said several cases of lease or tack, see "Progressive Duty."

MEMORIAL to be registered pursuant to any act of Parliament made or to be made for the public registering of deeds and conveyances in England or Ireland; that is to say—

For every piece of vellum, parchment, or paper upon which any such memorial shall be written £0 2 6

MORTGAGE, conditional surrender by way of mortgage, further charge, wadset, and heritable bond, disposition, assignation, or tack in security, and eik to a reversion, of or affecting any lands, estate, or property, real or personal, heritable or moveable, whatsoever:

Also any deed containing an obligation to infeft any person in an annual rent, or in lands or other heritable subjects in Scotland, under a clause of reversion, but without any personal bond or obligation therein contained for payment of the money or stock intended to be secured:

Also any conveyance of any lands, estate, or property whatsoever, in trust to be sold or otherwise converted into money, which shall be intended only as a security, and shall be redeemable before the sale or other disposal thereof, either by express stipulation or otherwise, except where such conveyance shall be made for the benefit of creditors generally, or for the benefit of creditors specified, who shall accept the provision made for payment of their debts in full satisfaction thereof, or who shall exceed five in number:

Also any defeasance, letter of reversion, back bond, declaration, or other deed or writing for defeating or making redeemable or explaining or qualifying any conveyance, disposition, assignation, or tack of any lands, estate, or property whatsoever, which shall be apparently absolute, but intended only as a security:

Also any agreement, contract, or bond, accompanied with a deposit of title-deeds for making a mortgage, wadset, or any such other security or conveyance as aforesaid of any lands, estate, or property comprised in such title-deeds, or for pledging or charging the same as a security: And also any deed whereby a real burden shall be declared or created on lands or heritable subjects in Scotland:

Where the same respectively shall be made as a security for the payment of any definite and certain sum of money advanced or lent at the time, or previously due and owing, or forborne to be paid, being payable,

Not exceeding 50 l.	£0 1 3
Exceeding 50 l. and not exceeding 100 l.	0 2 6
Exceeding 100 l. and not exceeding 150 l.	0 3 9
Exceeding 150 l. and not exceeding 200 l.	0 5 0
Exceeding 200 l. and not exceeding 250 l.	0 6 3
Exceeding 250 l. and not exceeding 300 l.	0 7 6

And where the same shall exceed 300*l.*, then for every 100*l.* and also for any fractional part of 100*l.* 0 2 6

And where the same respectively shall be made as a security for the repayment of money to be thereafter lent, advanced, or paid, or which may become due upon an account current, together with any sum already advanced or due, or without, as the case may be, other than and except any sum or sums of money to be advanced for the insurance of any property comprised in such mortgage or security against damage by fire, or to be advanced for the insurance of any life or lives, or for the renewal of any grant or lease upon the dropping of any life or lives, pursuant to any agreement in any deed whereby any estate or interest held upon such life or lives shall be granted, assigned, or assured, or whereby any annuity shall be granted or secured for such life or lives:

If the total amount of the money secured or to be ultimately recoverable thereupon shall be limited not to exceed a given sum—the same duty as on a mortgage or wadset for such limited sum.

And if the total amount of the money secured or to be ultimately recoverable thereupon shall be uncertain and without any limit, then the same shall be available as a security or charge for such an amount only of money or stock intended to be thereby secured as the ad valorem duty denoted by any stamp or stamps thereon will extend to cover.

And where the same respectively shall be made as a security for the transfer or re-transfer of any share in any of the Government or Parliamentary stocks or funds, or in the stock and funds of the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, or of the Bank of Ireland, or of the East India Company, or of the South Sea Company, or of any other company or corporation, in consideration of stock or money advanced or lent at the time, or previously due and owing, or forborne to be paid, being payable—the same duty as on a mortgage or wadset for a sum of money equal to the value of the stock or fund secured according to the average price thereof on the day of the date of the mortgage or other instrument aforesaid, or in either of the ten days preceding, or if there shall not have been any known sale on any of such days, then on the latest day preceding on which there shall have been a known sale.

MORTGAGE.—And where any such deed or instrument as aforesaid shall be made respectively as a security for the payment of any rent-charge or annuity, or any sum or sums of money by way of repayment, or in satisfaction or discharge, or in redemption of any sum of money lent, advanced, or paid, as or for or in the nature of a loan intended to be repaid, satisfied, discharged, or redeemed, in manner aforesaid—the same duty as on a mortgage or wadset for the sum of money so lent, advanced, or paid.

MORTGAGE.—Any transfer or assignment, disposition, or assignation of any mortgage or wadset, or of any such other security as aforesaid, or of the benefit thereof, or of the money or stock thereby secured;

Where no further sum of money or stock shall be added to the principal money or stock already secured,

If such principal money or stock already secured shall not exceed in amount or value in the whole the sum of 1400*l.*—the same duty as on a mortgage or wadset for the total amount or value of such principal money or stock.

And if such principal money or stock shall exceed in amount or value in the whole the sum of 1400*l.* £1 15 0

And where any further sum of money or stock shall be added to the principal money or stock already secured—the same duty as on a mortgage or wadset for such further money or stock only.

And in every other case not hereinbefore expressly provided for, such transfer, assignment, disposition, or assignation shall be chargeable with the duty of £1 15 0

Provided always, that no such deed or instrument as aforesaid shall in any of the said several cases be chargeable with any further or other duty than is herein expressly provided, (except progressive duty), by reason of its containing any further or additional security for the payment or transfer or re-transfer of such money or stock, or any interest or dividends thereon, or any new covenant, proviso, power, stipulation, or agreement, or other matter whatever in relation to such money or stock, or the interest or dividends thereon, or by reason of its containing all or any of such matters.

MORTGAGE.—Any deed or instrument made for the further assurance only of any estate or property which shall have been already mortgaged, pledged, or charged as a security, by any deed or instrument which shall have paid the ad valorem duty on mortgages or bonds chargeable under any act or acts in force at the time of making such last-mentioned deed or instrument:

Also any deed or instrument made as an additional or further security for any sum or sums of money, or any share or shares of any of the stocks or funds before mentioned, which shall have been already secured by any deed or instrument which shall have paid the said ad valorem duty on mortgages or bonds chargeable as aforesaid, shall be chargeable respectively with the following duties; that is to say—

Where the total amount or value of the money or stock already secured, and in respect whereof the said ad valorem duty shall have been paid, shall not exceed the sum of 1400*l.*—the same duty as on a mortgage or wadset for the amount or value of the said money or stock.

And in any other case £1 15 0

Provided always, that if any further sum of money or stock shall be added to the principal money or stock already secured, such deed or instrument for further assurance, or additional or further security, either by the mortgagor or by any person entitled to the property mortgaged by descent, devise, or bequest from such mortgagor, shall be chargeable only (exclusive of progressive duty) with the ad valorem duty on mortgages under this act, in respect of such further sum of money or stock in lieu of the duty aforesaid, notwithstanding that the same deed or instrument may also contain any covenant either by the mortgagor or by any person entitled as aforesaid, proviso, power, stipulation, or agreement, or other matter whatever in relation to the money or stock already secured, or the interest or dividends thereon.

MORTGAGE.—Any reconveyance, release, surrender, discharge, or renunciation of any mortgage or wadset, or of any other such security as aforesaid, or of the benefit thereof, or of the money or stock thereby secured;

Where the total amount of the principal money or stock at any time secured shall not exceed the sum of 1400*l.*—the same duty as on a mortgage or wadset for the amount or value of the said money or stock.

And in any other case £1 15 0

And in all the said several cases of deeds and instruments chargeable under the head of "Mortgage," see "Progressive Duty."

PROGRESSIVE DUTY; that is to say;—Where any deed or instrument of any description whatever chargeable with any stamp-duty either under this schedule or under any other act or acts now in force, together with any schedule, receipt, or other matter put or indorsed thereon or annexed thereto, shall contain 2160 words or upwards, then for every entire quantity of 1080 words contained therein, over and above the first 1080 words, there shall be charged the further progressive duty following; that is to say—

Where such deed or instrument shall be chargeable with any ad valorem stamp-duty or duties not exceeding in the whole the sum of 10*s.*, a further progressive duty equal to the amount of such ad valorem duty or duties.

And in every other case (except where any other progressive duty is by this Schedule expressly charged thereon), a further progressive duty of £0 10 0

Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall extend to charge the said progressive duty in any case in which express provision is made by any such act or acts as aforesaid for charging a certain duty on every skin, sheet, or piece of vellum, parchment, or paper in or upon which any deed or instrument shall be contained or written, or to charge with progressive duty any description of deed or instrument not chargeable with progressive duty under any act or acts now in force, or to charge any deed or instrument with any higher rate or amount of progressive duty than is now chargeable on a deed or instrument of the like description under any such act or acts as aforesaid.

RESIGNATION.—Principal or original instrument of resignation, or service of cognition of heirs, or charter or seisin of any houses, lands, or other heritable subjects in Scotland holding burgh or of burghage tenure £0 5 0

Also instrument of resignation of any lands or other heritable subjects in Scotland not of burghage tenure 0 5 0

And where any of the said instruments shall contain 2160 words or upwards, then for every entire quantity of 1080 words contained therein over and above the first 1080 words, a further progressive duty of 0 5 0

SCHEDULE, inventory, or catalogue of any lands, hereditaments, or heritable subjects, or of any furniture, fixtures, or other goods or effects, or containing the terms and conditions of any proposed sale, lease, or tack, or the conditions and regulations for the cultivation or management of any farm lands or other property leased or agreed to be leased, or containing any other matter or matters of contract or stipulation whatsoever, which shall be referred to in or by and be intended to be used or given in evidence as part of or as material to any agreement, lease, tack, bond, deed, or other instrument charged with any duty, but which shall be separate and distinct from and not indorsed on or annexed to such agreement, lease, tack, bond, deed, or other instrument;

Where any such schedule, inventory, or catalogue shall be so referred to in or by any such agreement, lease, tack, bond, deed, or other instrument chargeable with any stamp-duty not exceeding 10*s.*, exclusive of progressive duty—the same duty (exclusive of progressive duty) as shall be so chargeable on such agreement, lease, tack, bond, deed, or other instrument.

And where any such schedule, inventory, or catalogue shall be referred to in or by any lease, tack, bond, deed, or such other instrument as aforesaid, chargeable with any stamp-duty exceeding 10*s.*, exclusive of progressive duty £0 10 0

And if in any of the said cases such schedule, inventory, or catalogue shall contain 2160 words or upwards, then for every entire quantity of 1080 words contained therein over and above the first 1080 words—a further progressive duty of the same amount as the duty hereinbefore charged thereon respectively.

SEISIN.—Instruments of seisin given upon any charter, precept of clare constat, or precept from Chancery, or upon any wadset, heritable bond, disposition, appraising, adjudication, or otherwise of any lands or heritable subjects in Scotland not of burghage tenure£0 5 0

And where the same shall contain 2160 words or upwards, then for every entire quantity of 1080 words contained therein over and above the first 1080 words, a further progressive duty of 0 5 0

SETTLEMENT.—Any deed or instrument, whether voluntary or gratuitous, or upon any good or valuable consideration other than a bona fide pecuniary consideration, whereby any definite and certain principal sum or sums of money, (whether charged or chargeable on lands or other hereditaments or heritable subjects, or not, or to be laid out in the purchase of lands or other hereditaments or heritable subjects, or not), or any definite and certain share or shares in any of the Government or Parliamentary stocks or funds, or in the stock and funds of the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, or of the Bank of Ireland, or of the East India Company, or of the South Sea Company, or of any other company or corporation, shall be settled or agreed to be settled upon or for the benefit of any person or persons, either in possession or reversion, either absolutely, or for life or other partial interest, or in any other manner whatsoever;

If such sum or sums of money, or the value of such share or shares in all or any of the said stocks or funds, or of such one or more of the said articles as shall be so settled or agreed to be settled, or both such sum or sums of money and the value of one or more of such articles together, shall not exceed in the whole 100l.£0 5 0

And if the same shall exceed 100l., then for every 100l. and also for any fractional part of 100l. 0 5 0

And all deeds or instruments chargeable with the said ad valorem duty which shall also contain any settlement of lands or other property, or contain any other matter or thing besides the settlement of such money or stock, shall be chargeable with such further stamp-duty as any separate deed or instrument containing such settlement of lands or other property, or other matter or thing, would have been chargeable with, exclusive of the progressive duty.

And where there shall be more than one such deed or instrument for effecting any such settlement as aforesaid, chargeable with any such duty or duties exceeding 1l. 15s., one of them only shall be charged with the said ad valorem duty; and also where any settlement shall be made in pursuance of any previous articles chargeable with and which shall have paid any such duty or duties exceeding 1l. 15s., such last-mentioned settlement shall not be chargeable with the said ad valorem duty; and the said deeds and instruments respectively not chargeable with the said ad valorem duty shall be charged with the duty to which the same may be liable under any more general description in this Schedule, or in the Schedule annexed to the said act of the fifty-fifth year of the reign of King George III; and on the whole being produced, duly executed and duly stamped, as hereby required, the latter shall also be stamped with a particular stamp for denoting or testifying the payment of the said ad valorem duty.

And see "Progressive Duty."

LONDON, OCTOBER 26, 1850.

In our last number we considered the subject of negligence as between servants and their masters; we now propose to investigate some of the rules of law that relate to negligence as between strangers. Actions for this cause are often defended upon the ground that the plaintiff himself contributed to the injury of which he complains; and it becomes important to consider the effect of such contribution. The question has been complicated by the use of the word "injury," which has been indiscriminately applied to the accident and to its consequences. It is essential, however, to a right understanding of this branch of law, clearly to distinguish between the two, as upon this distinction depends the responsibility or non-responsibility of the party sought to be charged.

The principle to be deduced from the decisions is, that if a party contribute in any degree to the immediate cause of the mischief, he cannot complain of the injury that may ensue, but he may recover if he only increase the amount of the injury or the injurious consequences. As was said by Coleridge, J., in Sills v. Brown, (9 Car. & P. 601), "The question is, whether the plaintiff, by his negligence, substantially contributed to the occurrence of the injury, not to the amount of it."

The first portion of the above principle is generally submitted to the jury in these terms—whether the plaintiff, by the exercise of proper care and skill, might have avoided the consequences of the other party's negligence. If so, he cannot maintain an action. (See Starfield v. Forrester, 11 East, 60; Thorogood v. Ryan, 18 L. J., C. P., 336; and Bridge v. The Grand Northern Railway Company, 3 M. & W. 244).

VOL. XIV.

P P

In Davies v. Mann (10 M. & W. 546) the defendant negligently drove his horses and waggon against, and killed, an ass, which had been left in the highway fettered in the fore feet, and thus unable to get out of the way of the defendant's waggon; and the jury were held to be properly directed, that although it was illegal on the part of the plaintiff to put the animal on the highway, the plaintiff was entitled to recover. And a plaintiff may recover, though he might have prevented the accident, provided he was in no degree in fault in not endeavouring to prevent it. (Vennall v. Gardner, 1 Cr. & M. 21).

In Butterfield v. Forrester (supra) the defendant had placed an obstruction in a street in Derby, and the plaintiff, who was riding very violently, rode against it, and was hurt. It was held, that he could not recover, if, with reasonable and ordinary care, he could have seen and avoided the obstruction. In Lack v. Leward, (4 Car. & P. 106), Tenterden, C. J., ruled, that if the accident could have been avoided, but for the negligence of the plaintiff, he could not recover. (See also Lutford v. Large, 5 Car. & P. 421; Pluckwell v. Wilson, Id. 375; Woolf v. Beard, 8 Car. & P. 373; Hawkins v. Cooper, Id. 473; and Flower v. Adam, 2 Taunt. 314). In Thorogood v. Bryan it was also decided that a passenger in a public conveyance is so far identified with the driver of it, that the negligence of the driver becomes the negligence of the passenger.

Two cases have been recently decided, in which the plaintiff had, by his own conduct, increased the amount of the injury. In Greenland v. Chaplin (19 L. J., Ex., 293) the plaintiff was a passenger on board a steam-boat, and was injured by the falling of its anchor, in consequence of a collision with a steamer belonging to the defendant. There was conflicting evidence as to the propriety of the mode in which the anchor was carried, and also whether the plaintiff had not placed himself in a dangerous position. It was held to be a misdirection to tell the jury that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover, if there was negligence in the stowage of the anchor, or in placing himself in the position he did, although the collision occurred from the negligence of the defendant. Pollock, C. B., in delivering the judgment of the Court, said, "The man who is guilty of a wrong, who thereby produces mischief to another, has no right to say, 'Part of that mischief would not have arisen if you had not been yourself guilty of some negligence;' and I think that where the negligence did not in any degree contribute to the immediate cause of the accident, negligence ought not to be set up as an answer to the action; and certainly I am not aware, that, according to any decision that has ever occurred, the jury are to take the consequences and divide them in proportion, according to the negligence of the one or of the other party."

In Rigby v. Hewitt (19 L. J., Ex., 291) the action was against the owner of an omnibus to recover damages for injuries sustained by the plaintiff by being thrown off another omnibus by the negligence of the driver of the defendant's omnibus. It appeared that the omnibuses were racing at the time, and that the defendant's omnibus struck against the one on which the plaintiff was riding, and caused it to swing against a lamp-post, by which the plaintiff was injured. Had the omnibus which was struck not been proceeding so rapidly, it might have been pulled up after the collision, and the accident have been prevented. Rolfe, B., in summing up, told the jury that the plaintiff was not disentitled to recover merely because the omnibus he was on was driving at a furious rate; and that if the jury thought that the collision took place from the negligence of the defendant's driver, so that the other driver was not in fault in not endeavouring to avoid the accident, then the defendant was liable. This ruling was supported by the Court above.

In the two last cases, Pollock, C. B., doubted whether a person guilty of negligence was responsible for all its consequences, or only for such as might reasonably be expected to result under ordinary circumstances. In the course of the argument, his Lordship asked, "If a person choose to walk in a crowded street with an open knife under his coat, and another person wrongfully runs against him, is he to be responsible for all the damage that the knife may inflict upon the person who carries it?" The rest of the Court seemed to be of opinion that he would be answerable to the full extent; but it was not necessary to decide the extreme case on either of the occasions above referred to.

WE have received from Mr. Carrighan some observations on the criticisms to which we subjected his pamphlet on the Masters' offices, (see ante, p. 357); and as Mr. Carrighan expresses, we believe, the opinion of very many able solicitors, and as the subject is one of considerable practical importance, we insert his observations, not, however, in any degree retracting our own view, nor meaning to hold out that, on all occasions, we shall feel it our duty to publish the answers which legal authors may wish to address to our criticisms. Mr. Carrighan writes as follows:—

You observe, "The objection to this system is said to be the uncertainty of the time at which any cause may be called on, and the consequent frequently useless consumption of the solicitor's time in attending or having somebody in attendance to watch."

You then proceed to say, "But the fallacy of the argument against the new regulations, as compared with the old ones, is, the taking it for granted that, under the old system, a solicitor with a mass of business could insure that each portion should come on at a different time, and that, under the new system, they must all come on at the same time. If, under the old system, a solicitor had an appeal in the Chancellor's Court, two causes in the Vice-Chancellors' Courts, and one long warrant in a winding-up case, he could no more be sure of being able to attend to his different other warrants in the Masters' and taxing offices than he can under the new system."

Now a solicitor, beyond all doubt, could, under the old system, insure that each portion of his business in the Master's office should come on at a different time, because the times of proceeding were fixed and ascertained, and he might, under certain limitations, fix those times himself.

My observations on this head were directed to the Masters' offices, and not to the superior courts; so that the reasoning by which you assume to expose what you term the fallacy of my argument, has no application to the point.

You then remark, "that the warrants in the Masters' offices were at fixed times, did not help me, because the appeal and the causes by their rank, and the winding-up warrant by virtue of its length, if they came on, would exclude the ordinary warrants; and they required to be watched while the solicitor was attending any such ordinary warrants."

It is a matter of surprise to me, Sir, that you are so little impressed with the important difference between fixed and indefinite times of proceeding. Let me ask, is there no difference between a client saying to his solicitor, "I will call upon you, Sir, on Monday next, at ten o'clock," and "I will call upon you sometimes in the course of Monday?" In the one case the solicitor gets rid of his client in half-an-hour, and in the other he is either chained to his office the whole day, or he turns his back upon his client.

Now, Sir, when you say that warrants in the Masters' offices being at fixed times did not help a solicitor, because the causes he might have would, "if they came on," exclude the ordinary warrants, you evade, or rather you beg the question; because the pith of your observation hangs upon the hypothetical "if they came on." But let us suppose they do not come on, or that they come on late, what, in such case, is easier than for the solicitor to slip out of court at the appointed time of his warrants, and attend them before the Master? This is constantly done. But he may happen not to have any cause in the paper in the courts above; in such case there would be nothing to interfere with his warrants.

You observe, "It might happen under the old system, and it may happen under the new one, that, with such a multiplicity of business as is portioned out in Mr. Carrighan's table, all things should so arrange themselves as that each portion should come on at a separate time. Such a combination would be very unlikely, however, under either or any system; and the whole difficulty, in effect, resolves itself into that of watching, to enable the solicitor to attend by himself, or by his clerks, the business of the greatest importance, or to oscillate between different courts and different offices, giving a portion of attention to each."

Here, Sir, you admit that embarrassment must exist under both systems, arising out of the multiplicity and variety of business; but then you affect, by your concluding remarks, to get rid of the dilemma, by observing, "that the whole difficulty, in effect, resolves itself into that of watching," &c.

Now this very watching embodies the whole evil.

It was difficult and onerous enough, under the old system, to be continually watching the courts. Ask a city solicitor his opinion and feeling upon this subject, assuming the Courts to be sitting at Westminster. What will be his reply? What has, indeed, been his complaint and outcry for years upon this score?

But what will be his position now, when, instead of five equity courts where causes are heard at indefinite periods, he will have fifteen indefinite courts to watch and dance attendance upon, letting alone the common-law courts and all the subordinate offices?

After admitting the probability that the solicitor may find it necessary, under the new system, to enlarge his establishment, you proceed to say, "If the solicitor is at greater expense by keeping more clerks, he will get through his business with a proportionate rapidity, and therefore with a proportionate advantage. . . . But inasmuch as with solicitors, as well as with other professional men, the measure of their annual gains is the business done, and not merely the business undertaken to be done, it is difficult to see how a solicitor, with a large and continually inflowing current of business, can be a loser by a system which will enable him to get through a larger quantity of business in a given period."

This, Sir, is a gross fallacy. When you remark this, you overlook such cases as Villiers v. Harrington, where the solicitor was detained upwards of eleven days, and then withdrew his cause from the list in despair; and Hedges v. Skinner, where, upon a mere proposal for a receiver, the solicitor waited three days for an audience.

These cases happened in one office. Scores of others could be cited in the same and other offices. Could this have happened under the former system? If the hour had been fixed, would they not at once have been disposed of?

Now, with such a system of delay as this, how can the engaging a larger establishment of clerks enable the solicitor to accomplish more business, and so make himself proportionably richer? A solicitor detained a whole day, to the neglect of all his other affairs, and that for a fee of 6s. 8d., (or 3s. 4d. only if he happens to be an agent only), and so on from day to day!

Now, suppose a solicitor to keep, under the new system, two clerks, where before he kept one, would he not, under such a dilatory system as this, and with such a scale of remuneration, undergo a double ruin? Would he not feel disposed rather to abandon such a practice in disgust?

But is the client benefited any more than the solicitor? This question is answered by a reference to what takes place in Villiers v. Harrington, and other cases of the like sort.

The solicitor, in fact, haunts the Master's office, until, despairing of an audience, he goes about his business, or he is called away by other matters. The cause at length is called on, but he is absent. Nothing is done, and the matter goes to the bottom of the list, when a repetition of the like series of vexations and delays occurs.

It is a fallacy to assume that more business is or can be done under the new system. The contrary is the case, as is abundantly proved.

As your valuable journal is a very fit medium for communicating suggestions, I beg to surmise that it would be an improvement upon the system were all applications for time, commissions, and similar small matters, not having any bearing upon the substantial merits and inquiries in the suit, to be disposed of by one particular Master. This would relieve and enable the other Masters to give up the whole of their time uninterruptedly to graver matters of inquiry, instead of having a considerable portion of it absorbed and frittered away by unconnected matters of irrelevant and trifling consideration.

PARTNERSHIP EN COMMANDITE*.

THE law of France, besides the "société en nom collectif," which is the same as our ordinary partnership, and the "société anonyme," which is similar to our chartered company, being created by a royal decree or ordonnance, recognises a third description of partnership called "société en commandite." It would appear, however, that the old law of France did not recognise this sort of partnership any more than the common law of England does now. M. Pardessus, the eminent French jurist and writer on commercial law, thus opens his description of it:—"La société en commandite, étant une exception au droit commun, doit être clairement établie; ou ne la suppose pas." (Cours de Droit Commercial, 1028). It is not clear how far this species of partnership was used by the Romans, but it appears from the researches of M. Pardessus (Collection des Loix Maritimes) that it was in extensive use in the great commercial cities situated on the Mediterranean from a very early period in the modern history of Europe. And the investigations of M. Troplong, another eminent writer on French law, appear to lead to the conclusion that the early commercial prosperity of the Italian States is very much to be attributed to the means of carrying on colossal operations afforded by this species of partnership. It not only enabled the nobility to evade the ecclesiastical restrictions on usury, but to engage largely in lucrative commercial adventures without their names appearing, and consequently without their dignity being compromised. (Troplong, Droit Civil Expliqué, Pref. to tom. xii,

* M. Troplong (tom. xii, p. 355) thus explains the name:—"Dans le latin de la moyenne et de la basse latinité, commandare signifiait déposer une chose, la prêter, la confier; ainsi, ce nom de commanda (commande) était propre à toutes les sociétés dans lesquelles se rencontrait la combinaison d'un capital confié à un travailleur." The following is one of his notes to the above passage:—"Toubeau a donné son étymologie du mot commandite et l'on ne saurait rien de plus plaisant: 'M. Collinet m'a dit que le mot commandite vient de comment dit, ut dictum est, une société aux termes et aux conditions dites, spécifiées et portées par le contrat ou scripts. Cette étymologie me semble fort bonne et fort naturelle.' (P. 103). Et à moi, elle me rappelle cette facétie sur le mot cordonnier, homme qui donne des cors aux pieds!"

† This name seems to indicate that feature of its character which takes the names of the individual members of whom the aggregate is composed out of the knowledge of the law—in this case, the law looking not to the individuals, but only to the body corporate. The code defines it as "not distinguished by the names of any of the partners," but "as named after the nature of the trade which it purports to carry on." (Code de Commerce, arts. 29, 30).

‡ The French code recognises indeed (art. 47) a fourth kind of trading company, "associations communales en participation," but they are not bound to regard the formalities prescribed for other descriptions of partnership. (Code de Commerce, art. 50).

p. 69). And we have an example of the same thing in the present time in the statement of one of the witnesses examined before the Committee on Savings, the witness stating that the King of Holland was commanditaire in many instances.

The leading principle of commandite associations or partnerships consists in this—that only those who interfere in the management incur unlimited liability, the other partners or shareholders being only liable to the amount they have subscribed or agreed to subscribe. The managing partners are called “commandités” or “les gérants,” the others “commanditaires.” The association, as between the commandités or managing partners and the public, is an ordinary partnership; as between the other partners or shareholders, the commanditaires, and the public, it is a privileged company.

In order to constitute a commandite association, it must be stipulated in the deed of association that certain of the associates be excluded from management, and that their risk be limited to the amount of their respective contributions. According to Pardessus, this double stipulation need not be stated in more express or circuitous terms than, that “tels et tels sont commanditaires, ce mot évitant la periphrase que sans cela, il faudrait employer.” (Cours de Droit Commercial, 1028).

The law of France requires the public registration of an extract of the deed of partnership en commandite, stating the time when the partnership is to commence and to terminate, the names and addresses of the managing partners, and the amount of the capital subscribed. (Code de Commerce, arts. 42, 43). The “extract” must also state that among the associates there are so many commanditaires, without giving their names, it being considered that this would be useless, since the credit given is not to the personal responsibility of the commanditaires, but to the funds supplied by them; and that one of the advantages of the system is the allowing of parties to supply funds to commercial enterprises without the publication of their names. The “extract” must also set forth in what sums or in what species of property (objets) their contributions consist, and whether or not they have been paid up. (Pardessus, Cours &c., 1029). The above statement is required to be made public in every arrondissement in which the partnership has a place of business, within fifteen days after the execution of the deed of partnership, under the penalty of the nullity of the agreement as between the parties, but without affecting their liability to third persons. (Code de Commerce, art. 27). A false statement of the amount of funds guaranteed is punishable as an act of swindling. (Code Penal, art. 405).

The liability of the commanditaire is restricted by the terms of the code to the funds qu’il a mis au dû mettre, (art. 26); on which words the French Courts have put different constructions; but the better opinion seems to be that the amount is to be confined to the sum which he has contracted to pay, and that the profits received by him are not liable to be refunded, unless a case of fraud can be established. (For a reference to the conflicting decisions, see Report on Partnership, of the Society for promoting the Amendment of the Law, p. 12, note 4). The Code expressly permits the capital of a partnership en commandite to be divided into shares, which the Courts in 1830 decided may be made transferable by the mere delivery of the share or certificate. (Id., p. 13).

It is an indispensable condition of this species of association, that the commanditaire take no part in the management of the business or adventure. If he perform any act of management, he becomes liable for all the engagements of the association. He ceases to be a commanditaire, and becomes a commandité. In other words, his liability ceases to be limited to the amount of his contribution. According to this rule, a shareholder cannot be employed by the association even by power of attorney. (Code de Commerce, art. 27). The question, of what degree of interference does and what does not amount to such an act of management as produces unlimited liability, has given rise to much discussion. But it has been settled that a commanditaire does not incur this penalty by dealing with the firm on his own account; so that, for example, a commanditaire in a firm or association formed for running public conveyances may supply the carriages to the firm. So, although Pardessus states it (Cours &c., 1030) as a consequence of the general rule, that a clerk or servant cannot become a commanditaire, whether by a contribution of money to the general fund or by his labour being considered as such contribution, without incurring the full liability, it is now considered to be a consequence of the declaration of the Council of State of the 29th August, 1809, that a commanditaire may act as a clerk or servant to the firm without losing his character of commanditaire. (12 Troplong, Droit Civil Expliqué, 417; 17 Locré, Législation de la France, 461).

Under this last head will fall the case, mentioned in the minutes of evidence taken before the Select Committee on Savings, of M. Léclaire, a house painter in Paris, who ten years ago undertook to associate his workmen to the profits of his business, and the results were that his own profits increased most rapidly. M. Léclaire, in a very interesting pamphlet published by him on the subject, speaks very strongly of the moral improvement which the plan produced in his workmen—an improvement in their conduct, both when at work and also at other times. It seemed to raise them in their own estimation, and induced them to cultivate careful habits of all sorts. Nor is M. Léclaire’s the only establishment of the kind in Paris. M. Dupont, the printer of the “Revue des Deux Mondes,” who keeps one of the largest printing-offices in Paris, is stated by Mr. Ludlow, in his evidence before the Committee on Savings, to be pursuing the same plan.

In their commentaries on this law of partnership the French lawyers have drawn a distinction between acts of management (gestion) and the exercise of a certain control over the gerans. Thus M. Pardessus states (Cours de Droit Commercial, 1031) that a commanditaire is not precluded from taking a part in the deliberations of the association which relate to the auditing of the accounts, the distribution of dividends, the necessity of calling in instalments, and even what engagements or speculations shall be entered into. Moreover, the commanditaire has evidently the right to hinder the commandités from engaging in operations which are interdicted by the deed of partnership, and the right of satisfying himself that the provisions of the deed have not been violated, and also whether the commandités are faithful or not to their engagements. This right is a necessary consequence of the partnership agreement or contract: for the partnership en commandite “differs,” says M. Pardessus, “from ordinary partnership only in one point—the limitation of the obligations of the commanditaires towards the creditors; as to the individuals who compose the partnership, the social relations between them remain unaltered.”

We suppose we may conclude that the French law, though it recognises the right of the commanditaires to be consulted as to the affairs of the partnership, is not sufficiently stringent to raise such obstacles to the operation of the principle above referred to as would render that operation impracticable—an effect produced by the present state of the English law of partnership. For by the English law, in the first place, every partner in an ordinary partnership is subject to unlimited liability. Next, as soon as the number of partners amounts to twenty-five, the Joint-stock Companies Registration Act steps in and declares that there must be three directors, in the nomination of whom every shareholder shall have a voice. Now, this manifestly at once puts an end to any such beneficent plan as that so successfully pursued by M. Léclaire and others in France.

We extract the following account of the extent to which the form of partnership en commandite prevails throughout the world from the Law Amendment Society's Report before referred to:—

"At the present time the French Code de Commerce constitutes or serves as the foundation of the law of Piedmont, Tuscany, the Papal and Neapolitan States, Spain and Portugal, Belgium and Holland.

"In the north of Europe the species of partnership which we have been considering seems not to have taken root. No provisions relating to it are to be discovered in the laws of Oleron, or those of the Hanse Towns—the great sources of northern commercial law. In Scotland, too, the recognised doctrines appear to be similar to those received in England; and the only approach to a partnership en commandite is made by the ambiguous transactions known as a joint trading—a species of dealing which the law of England in like manner acknowledges, but with the result only of opening a field for legal ingenuity to dispute whether certain parties are partners or not.

"In Germany, however, the principle on which it depends is widely recognised. The Austrian Code provides that the members of a firm whose names are not announced shall in no case be answerable for more than their share of the capital. By the Prussian law a person is allowed to entrust his capital to a firm at a higher rate of interest than the law allows generally, if he will stipulate to share the risk in proportion to his capital, it being expressly provided that the creditors of the firm shall have no claim upon him beyond that amount. And by the laws of Frankfort, a person who lends his money to a partnership without taking any part in the management, on condition of a share in the profits, is not liable to any further claim in consequence of the inability of the partnership to meet its engagements.

"The practice of forming partnerships en commandite is, however, not confined to Europe. It exists also extensively in the United States. The Code of Louisiana admits it under the title of partnership in commandam; and it is stated by Mr. Kent to have been authorised by statute in the States of Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Florida, Mississippi, Indiana, Michigan, and New York.

"The provisions of the Code of Louisiana substantially resemble those of the French Code, which serves as the basis of its legislation. The question upon which the French Courts have been divided, as to the liability of partners to 'repay dividends received out of net profits fairly made during the solvency of the partnership,' is here expressly decided in the negative.

"The conditions under which the establishment of this species of partnership is permitted in the other States above enumerated are, as we learn from Mr. Kent's Commentaries, nearly the same as those adopted by the law of New York, to which they are subsequent in date. It seems, therefore, sufficient to mention the provisions of that law. They are somewhat more stringent than those imposed in France. For instance, before such a partnership can commence operations, the parties who are desirous of forming it are required to register, for public inspection, the names and residences of the commanditaires, known in America as 'special partners,' in addition to the other particulars required to be registered in France; and the gérants—there called the general partners—are required to make affidavit that the sums agreed to be contributed have been paid. Any false statement made by the general partners, in these respects, makes all persons interested in the partnership 'liable for all the engagements thereof as general partners*.' Again, no partner is permitted to transfer his share in the partnership property during the continuance of the partnership; and it is expressly provided, that if, 'by the payment of interest or division of profits, the original capital has been reduced, the partners receiving the same shall be bound to restore the amount necessary to make good his share of capital with interest.' In France it has been shewn that the partner would not be obliged to refund past profits unless in a case of fraudulent dealing.

"Lastly, it may be observed, that by an Irish Act of the 21 & 22 Geo. 3, the formation of partnerships en commandite was permitted in Ireland to a certain extent, the capital of these partnerships being limited to 50,000*l.*, and their duration to fourteen years. The statute does not appear to have been acted upon, though for what reason it is not easy to ascertain. One cause may, perhaps, be found in a provision, by which half the net profits are required to be laid by annually to form a reserve fund for the payment of the creditors in case the concern should fail, the surplus, or the whole if not required for the payment of debts, being divisible among the partners at the end of the stipulated term of the partnership, but not till that period."

In framing a measure for this country on the subject of partnership en commandite, or partnership with limited liability, not only the French Code but the Codes of New York and Louisiana might, and they doubtless would, be consulted with much advantage.

The following evidence, taken by the Committee on Savings, gives some curious and interesting details as to the operation and effect of this sort of partnership in Belgium, Holland, and France, and also the opinion of a practical man of much experience as to the probable effect of its introduction into this country:—

"Thomas Wilson, Esq., called in, and examined.

"354. Chairman.—Your experience has been chiefly in Belgium and Holland, has it not?—Yes, and France also.

"355. Have you had experience of this law of limited liability, which the Committee understand prevails there?—Yes.

"356. Mr. Ewart.—How long have you lived in Holland?—I have been there since 1809; since the Walcheren expedition.

"357. Have you been extensively concerned in various transactions in that country?—In almost everything that has been going on upon the continent of Europe, where there has been a shilling to be gained; in all kinds of contracts of industry, speculations in the funds, in dyking rivers, and everything where anything could be gained.

"358. Chairman.—Having great experience of those wide transactions in Holland and Belgium, where this law prevails, what is your opinion of it; is it advantageous?—Yes; most of these operations have been carried on under societies, and also by limited liabilities en commandite.

"359. Looking at the practical operation of the law of limited responsibility in those large transactions of which you have had experience in Holland, have you found it beneficial?—Yes.

"360. Do you think that it tends to bring persons of prudence and caution and care to take part in enterprises of this nature, which you think they would not do if the responsibility were unlimited?—I do.

"361. Do you think, if the liability were unlimited, that parties of the character and mind I have spoken of would be unwilling to enter into such enterprises?—Yes, I do.

"362. Is it your opinion that they would be prevented, by the law of unlimited responsibility, from entering into such undertakings?—They would not enter into them.

* This seems a strange and objectionable provision.

"363. Do you find that under the law of limited liability, enterprises are carried out successfully by circumspect men, and to the great advantage of the community?—Completely so.

"364. Do you find that the enterprises headed by the cautious and circumspect men referred to, and carried out successfully, are joined by persons of the humbler and middle classes taking shares in them?—Yes.

"365. Do you think that these enterprises, so conducted and carried out, afford good investments for the savings of those humbler and middle classes?—I do.

"366. Mr. Ewart.—Are there many such societies in Holland?—Yes; Holland has gained a great portion of its land from seas and rivers.

"367. Chairman.—Do you refer to enterprises for the purpose of gaining land?—Yes, dykeing it in, and gaining it; in my time, from the Scheldt, I dare say there has been two or three hundred thousand acres gained by the local people undertaking it with capitalists; the local people have a knowledge of the soil, of the tillage, and the climate; of the rivers, and the heights of the water; and they are industrious, and they entice them to come in, and they come in and gain a profit.

"368. Mr. Ewart.—And that under a law of limited liability?—Yes.

"369. Which they would not be induced to do, you think, if that did not exist?—No; you buy a 'polder,' a piece of land of 5000 or 6000 acres, and you get the capitalists to join you; and the people of the neighbourhood say, 'I will take to the amount of 20,000 guilders,' and others to the amount of 10,000 guilders, and they join till they make a polder, and divide it afterwards, and make a profit.

"370. Chairman.—They divide it into small shares, do they not?—Yes.

"371. What does a 'polder' mean?—It means land that has been reclaimed.

"372. Do you think that the same principle carried out in the same way that you have spoken of, successfully, for the purpose of inclosing land adjacent to rivers, and portions of the sea-coast, would be applicable to the supply of a town with water, to making a bridge, to making public lodging-houses on an improved plan, and in which the people should pay rent, or to any such local enterprises?—I believe it is so in Holland; they have there their houses of refuge for the poor; they are built by them in that way, not only as a gift, but as a speculation that benevolent people will pay them interest for.

"373. Is it found, generally speaking, that enterprises of the nature that you have referred to, do succeed tolerably well, and pay a moderate interest to the shareholders?—Yes, of course; otherwise they would soon be discontinued.

"374. The people of Holland are reckoned remarkably cautious in their proceedings, very industrious, and careful as to the nature of the undertakings that they enter upon, are they not?—Yes, they are so.

"375. And these parties have found the law you have spoken of, and the mode of carrying out those enterprises, particularly successful?—Of course.

"376. Is that a popular mode of investment that the humbler and middle classes are much accustomed to look to?—Yes; but you see that they have done it before this law was brought into Holland, fifty years ago; they did it themselves, morally, from man to man; the law then did not exist in Holland—it was done upon confidence; but since 1806 they have worked upon it, and it does well. They have coal pits and iron pits, and the King of Holland was commanditaire in many instances.

"377. Does your experience extend into other countries besides Holland?—Yes, into Belgium.

"378. Is it also found successful in Belgium?—Yes; most of the collieries there have been worked en commandite, or with limited liability.

"379. Has that a tendency to induce persons of cautious, circumspect, and careful habits to take shares in partnerships which they might be prevented from doing if their whole fortune were liable?—If this law did not exist, it would prevent them from going into partnerships as they do now.

"380. Have you not written a work upon this subject?—Yes. [The same was handed in.]

"381. Do you refer for the opinions that you give upon the subject to the work that you have written?—Yes; and there is another work that was written by me in French. It is, "On the Origin of English Capital from 1688 to 1846," relating to the same subject.

"382. Mr. J. A. Smith.—What was the state of the commercial law in Holland, in reference to partnerships, before the French Code was introduced?—You might make what partnerships you liked, as you can here. It was according to the partnership that you entered into.

"383. You cannot make a commandite partnership here?—The partnership in Holland was a contract, and therefore the contract would limit them at that time, so that an individual would only be responsible for the articles in that contract.

"384. It was virtually a limited liability, was it not?—Yes, morally.

"385. Not legally, but morally?—Yes.

"386. Chairman.—Are there any safeguards in the law en commandite that you think advisable?—I believe it would do more than anything I have known, and I have had a great deal of experience; I believe nothing would drive out panics so much in England as societies en commandite. The profits since the peace have been sixty millions a year. I reckon that every person in England saves 3*l.*; your profits are sixty millions a year, and that in five years will be three hundred millions sterling. You have the bankers, the monied men, and the manufacturers, all running as fast as they can to make use of capital, and they run into all manner of dangerous speculations, till a panic comes on all of a sudden. I have known it now for every five years. This is the eighth panic that I have seen, and the eighth panic that has touched me. You have in the book my history. I began when Mr. Rothschild was in Manchester in 1804, and from 1793 till now I have had experience amongst all these things, and I say that nothing will cure you but limited partnerships. The profits are not always in the hands of capitalists; the three hundred millions are spread, but not employed; but you foster all kinds of speculation, and the middle classes and the lower classes, who have gained their 3*l.* with the rest, are glad to run into everything to make use of it; every five years you have too much capital lost in that way.

"387. You think that, with the rapid accumulation of capital in this country, for the humbler and middle classes it would be a great advantage and safeguard if they were permitted to have limited liability?—Yes. I have young men here in London, who have been trying to do business in foreign merchandise, of which I have a very good knowledge, and they cannot do so; I cannot assist them, because, if I assist them, I am liable for the whole. I know many others; I know many sisters, aunts, and widows, who would employ their money in partnerships, provided they were not liable for all that they possess. I know families, some of the oldest families in England, that have had 20,000*l.* a year, and they would have been very glad to enter into partnerships, in the extraction of stones, slates, collieries, and iron, and everything; but they never would enter into them, because they were afraid. All these observations are to be found in the book. With regard to Ireland, I have mentioned all about flax; I have lived in Holland and Belgium, which are flax-growing countries, and there is no reason in the world but what you ought to grow flax in Ireland to the amount of two millions sterling a year, in the bogs, cultivated by partners en commandite."

Mr. Ludlow also thinks Ireland would afford a great and most beneficial field for its operation. He says—

"There is one especial field for limited liability, and that is Ireland; every one knows how Ireland is crying out for capital; the whole land is going to ruin. It can hardly be doubted, even if there are objections to limited liability in England, that anything that would facilitate the employment of capital would be of the greatest importance in that country."

"143. Mr. Greene.—Are you not aware that the present law with regard to Ireland allows the establishment of companies with limited liability?—I am so well acquainted with it, that I drew up for the Irish Solicitor-General, at Mr. Bellenden Ker's request, the sketch of a bill to amend that law; but I should say that limited liability is needed in Ireland, chiefly with reference to the land; for instance, to facilitate the formation of great farming companies."

"144. Chairman.—You think that the present law of limited liability in Ireland is susceptible of considerable amendment?—Considerable; there have been two companies established, I think, under it, of both of which I have seen the deeds; but still they find themselves very much hampered by the Anonymous Partnership Act. The act tends to stimulate only the industry of Ireland, being confined to trade and manufactures; and we all know that it is the land to which capital ought most to be directed in that country."

There is an argument sometimes advanced against the introduction of the commandite principle, namely, that the repeal of the usury laws produces the same effect, by facilitating investments in the shape of loans. This argument appears, as is observed by Mr. Ludlow in his evidence, to be satisfactorily disposed of by Mr. John Stuart Mill, both in his work on political economy and in his evidence before the Select Committee on Savings. Mr. Mill shews, that when a person, instead of becoming a sleeping partner under the commandite system, lends his money to traders at a high interest, this is a less advantageous mode both to the borrower and to the persons with whom he might deal; because the lender is a creditor, and would come into competition with the other creditors in the event of failure, instead of supplying funds out of which their claims might be satisfied. "The Legislature," observes Mr. Mill in his evidence, "does not think it necessary to restrict people from carrying on business with borrowed money, lest it should give a stimulus to speculation; and there seems no reason why, when it permits borrowing in every other mode, it should select for prohibition the one mode which is at the same time the most useful to the borrowers, and the most advantageous to the security of all other creditors."

We have in a former number (ante, p. 320) quoted Mr. Ludlow's opinion in favour of a modification of the form of limited partnership called the commandite. We consider his argument in favour of absolutely limited liability where the partnership is numerous, on the ground, principally, that in such case the managing partners are men of straw, to be, if not perfectly conclusive, entitled to much consideration. And with respect to his proposal to publish all the names, it seems to us that the advantages derived from that plan would be attended with disadvantages, perhaps more than counterbalancing the advantages. As in the case of the nobility in the time of the early commercial prosperity of Italy, and in the case of the King of Holland, cited by Mr. Thomas Wilson in his evidence above quoted, there are many persons in this country who would be very good and efficient commanditaires—"special partners," as the name is in America—who would decline the partnership altogether if the publication of their names were made an indispensable condition of their joining it. The publication of names was also proposed by Mr. H. S. Chapman in an able pamphlet, published some years ago, on the subject of "partnership en commandite."

In regard to the very important object of inquiry proposed by the Select Committee on the Savings of the Middle and Working Classes, we shall now proceed to state our conclusions drawn both from the evidence collected by the Committee, and from the consideration of the present state of the law of partnership both in this country and in France—indeed, in most parts of Europe and America. The result of the evidence published by this parliamentary committee (which agrees fully with all the evidence from other sources) is, that it is the opinion, not only of the middle and working classes themselves, but of educated men who have considered the subject, with the best means of judging of the practical effect, both moral and economical, of the working of the present law in this country, of political economists of eminence, of mercantile men, and lawyers of practical experience, that, even if the present law of ordinary partnerships is to remain untouched, that portion of the law of partnership which has been termed the law of joint-stock companies calls imperatively for important and immediate alteration. Not only the working men themselves, but experienced practical lawyers, who have in all ages been sufficiently imbued with that "fear of change which perplexes monarchs," have stated before a parliamentary committee their deliberate conviction, that the laws of partnership and joint-stock companies in this country are so constructed at present as only to suit the means and wants of the rich and powerful; and that there is no reason of sound policy why those laws should not be put upon such a footing as to place all the advantages, which are now shewn and admitted to attend limited liability, within the reach of those who have not at present the means of obtaining either a royal charter or a parliamentary act of incorporation.

It may, indeed, appear at first sight, from the result of certain cases imperfectly understood, that the law of England does permit the arrangement by which agents or servants, for the purpose of stimulating their exertions, are paid, not by a fixed sum, but by a certain proportion of the profits, or, to speak more accurately, of the returns of a business or adventure. We allude to such cases as Wilkinson v. Frasier, (4 Esp. 182), stated to be the case of the usual articles for voyages in the Southern Whale Fishery, where it was stipulated that the produce of the voyage should be divided in certain proportions, (the proportion of a common sailor being a 190th part, which obviously gives a right to an account); Perrott v. Bryant, (2 Y. & C. 61), where oyster dredgers, who had no interest in the boats, agreed to receive from the owners of the boats a stipulated share of the profits; Mair v. Glennie, (4 M. & S. 240), where the master of a ship, under an agreement between him and the owner, was to have, in lieu of all wages, primage, &c., one-fifth share of the profit and loss of the intended voyage; and Dry v. Boswell, (1 Camp. 329), where there was an agreement between the sole owner of a lighter and a lighterman that the latter, in consideration of working the lighter, should have half her gross earnings: in all which cases it was decided that there was not such a partnership existing as to prevent an action being maintained for wages. But in all this class of cases (except Dry v. Boswell) it must be observed, that the only question was of a partnership inter se, the determination of which question in the negative affords no assistance as to the other and totally distinct question of a partnership or no partnership quoad third parties, and of consequent liability or non-liability towards the world at large.

We submit that the difficulty as regards ordinary partnerships would in great part, if not altogether, be got over, by making the constitution of a partnership quoad third persons depend upon the same conditions as a partnership inter se. We should thus have a rule of law, if not perfect, at least so far plain and intelligible, which would be, that those whose share of the returns of the business or adventure consisted wholly of the profits of stock, or partly of the profits of stock and partly of the wages of labour, should be held liable as partners; but that those whose share of the said returns consisted wholly of the wages of labour, or the interest of money lent, or a certain fixed annuity, and who had no control or voice as principals in the management of the business or adventure, should not be held liable as partners. This would provide for all those cases in which agents or servants, for the purpose of stimulating their exertions, are paid, not by a fixed sum, but by a certain proportion of the profits; or, to speak more accurately, of the returns of the business or adventure; and would remedy one most important defect in the present state of the law. Another, perhaps still more important, defect would be provided for by either adopting the commandite form of partnership, or, should it be decided that the objections to that stated in Mr. Ludlow's evidence, and formerly quoted, are sufficiently valid, by granting, in conformity with the expressed opinion of Mr. H. Belenden Ker and Mr. J. M. Ludlow, such facilities for obtaining charters of limited liability, or perhaps so altering the general law of joint-stock companies, as to extend the universally-recognised advantages of limited liability to all ranks and classes of the community. Probably the best form would be joint-stock companies with altogether limited liability, and regular publication of the names of the managers and the state of the accounts, but without publication of the names of the other shareholders. One consequence, undoubtedly, of the commandite principle is to prevent capitalists from being managers; and nothing is gained by the unlimited liability of men of straw. Some measures for attaining all these objects we hope to see introduced in the next session of Parliament, under such auspices as shall insure their success. Assuredly these are not times in which we can afford to waste years in waiting for legislative measures on which depend, in no small degree, the safety and well-being of the community.

16. Interpretation of Terms.
17. Short Title.

Whereas it is expedient to extend and amend the acts relating to the copyright of designs: be it therefore enacted, &c.

Sect. 1. That the registrar of designs, upon application by or on behalf of the proprietor of any design not previously published within the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland or elsewhere, and which may be registered under the Designs Act, 1842, or under the Designs Act, 1843, for the provisional registration of such design under this act, and upon being furnished with such copy, drawing, print, or description, in writing or in print, as in the judgment of the said registrar shall be sufficient to identify the particular design in respect of which such registration is desired, and the name of the person claiming to be proprietor, together with his place of abode or business, or other place of address, or the style or title of the firm under which he may be trading, shall register such design in such manner and form as shall from time to time be prescribed or approved by the Board of Trade; and any design so registered shall be deemed "provisionally registered," and the registration thereof shall continue in force for the term of one year from the time of the same being registered as aforesaid; and the said registrar shall certify, under his hand and seal of office, in such form as the said board shall direct or approve, that the design has been provisionally registered, the date of such registration, and the name of the registered proprietor, together with his place of abode or business, or other place of address.

2. That the proprietor of any design which shall have been provisionally registered shall, during the continuance of such registration, have the sole right and property in such design; and the penalties and provisions of the said Designs Act, 1842, for preventing the piracy of designs, shall extend to the acts, matters, and things next hereinafter enumerated, as fully as if those penalties and provisions had been re-enacted in this act, and expressly extended to such acts, matters, and things respectively; that is to say—

1. To the application of any provisionally registered design, or any fraudulent imitation thereof, to any article of manufacture or to any substance.
2. To the publication, sale, or exposure for sale of any article of manufacture or any substance to which any provisionally registered design shall have been applied.
3. That during the continuance of such provisional registration neither such registration nor the exhibition or exposure of any design provisionally registered, or of any article to which any such design may have been or be intended to be applied, in any place, whether public or private, in which articles are not sold or exposed or exhibited for sale, and to which the public are not admitted gratuitously, or in any place which shall have been previously certified by the Board of Trade to be a place of public exhibition within the meaning of this act, nor the publication of any account or description of any provisionally registered design exhibited or exposed or intended to be exhibited or exposed in any such place of exhibition or exposure in any catalogue, paper, newspaper, periodical, or otherwise, shall prevent the proprietor thereof from registering any such design under the said Designs Acts at any time during the continuance of the provisional registration, in the same manner and as fully and effectually as if no such registration, exhibition, exposure, or publication had been made; provided that every article to which any such design shall be applied, and which shall be exhibited or exposed by or with the license or consent of the proprietor of such design, shall have thereon or attached thereto the words "provisionally registered," with the date of registration.
4. That if during the continuance of such provisional registration the proprietor of any design provisionally registered shall sell, expose, or offer for sale any article, substance, or thing to which any such design has been applied, such provisional registration shall be deemed to have been null and void immediately before any such sale, offer, or exposure shall have been first made; but nothing herein contained shall be construed to hinder or prevent such proprietor from selling or transferring the right and property in any such design.
5. That the Board of Trade may by order in writing with respect to any particular class of designs, or any particular design, extend the period for which any design may be provisionally registered under this act, for such term not exceeding the additional term of six months as to the said Board may seem fit; and whenever any such order shall be made, the same shall be registered in the office for the registration of designs, and during the extended term the protection and benefits conferred by this act in case of provisional registration shall continue as fully as if the original term of one year had not expired.
6. That the registrar of designs, upon application by or on behalf of the proprietor of any sculpture, model, copy, or cast within the protection of the Sculpture Copyright Acts, and upon being furnished with such copy, drawing, print, or description, in writing or in print, as in the judgment of the said registrar shall be sufficient to identify the particular sculpture, model, copy, or cast in respect of which registration is desired, and the name of the person claiming to be proprietor, together with his place of abode or business or other place of address, or the name, style, or title of the firm under which he may be trading, shall register such sculpture, model, copy, or cast in such manner and form as shall from time to time be prescribed or approved by the Board of Trade for the whole or any part of the term during which copyright in such sculpture, model, copy, or cast may or shall exist under the Sculpture Copyright Acts; and whenever any such registration shall be made, the said registrar shall certify under his hand and seal of office, in such form as the said Board shall direct or approve, the fact of such registration, and the date of the same, and the name of the registered proprietor, or the style or title of the firm under which such proprietor may be trading, together with his place of abode or business or other place of address.

7. That if any person shall, during the continuance of the copyright in any sculpture, model, copy, or cast which shall have been so registered as aforesaid, make, import, or cause to be made, imported, exposed for sale, or otherwise disposed of, any pirated copy or pirated cast of any such sculpture, model, copy, or cast, in such manner and under such circumstances as would entitle the proprietor to a special action on the case under the Sculpture Copyright Acts, the person so offending shall forfeit for every such offence a sum not less than 5*l.* and not exceeding 30*l.* to the proprietor of the sculpture, model, copy, or cast whereof the copyright shall have been infringed; and for the recovery of any such penalty the proprietor of the sculpture, model, copy, or cast which shall have been so pirated shall have and be entitled to the same remedies as are provided for the recovery of penalties incurred under the Designs Act, 1842: provided always, that the proprietor of any sculpture, model, copy, or cast which shall be registered under this act shall not be entitled to the benefit of this act, unless every copy or cast of such sculpture, model, copy, or cast which shall be published by him after such registration shall be marked with the word "registered," and with the date of registration.

8. That designs for the ornamenting of ivory, bone, papier maché, and other solid substances not already comprised in the classes numbered 1, 2, or 3 in the Designs Act, 1842, shall be deemed and taken to be comprised within the class numbered 4 in that act, and such designs shall be so registered accordingly.

9. That the Board of Trade may from time to time order that the copyright of any class of designs or any particular design registered or which may be registered under the Designs Act, 1842, may be extended for such term, not exceeding the additional term of three years, as the said Board may think fit, and the said Board shall have power to revoke or alter any such order as may from time to time appear necessary; and whenever any order shall be made by the said Board under this provision, the same shall be registered in the office for the registration of designs; and during the extended term the protection and benefits conferred by the said Designs Acts shall continue as fully as if the original term had not expired.

10. That the Board of Trade may from time to time make, alter, and revoke rules and regulations with respect to the mode of registration, and the documents and other matters and particulars to be furnished by persons effecting registration and provisional registration under the said acts and this act: provided always, that all such rules and regulations shall be published in the London Gazette, and shall forthwith upon the issuing thereof be laid before Parliament, if Parliament be sitting, and if Parliament be not sitting, then within fourteen days after the commencement of the then next session; and such rules and regulations, or any of them, shall be published or notified by the registrar of designs in such other manner as the Board of Trade shall think fit to direct.

11. That if in any case in which the registration of a design is required to be made under either of the said Designs Acts it shall appear to the registrar that copies, drawings, or prints as required by those acts cannot be furnished, or that it is unreasonable or unnecessary to require the same, the said registrar may dispense with such copies, drawings, or prints, and may allow in lieu thereof such specification or description in writing or in print as may be sufficient to identify and render intelligible the design in respect of which registration is desired; and whenever registration shall be so made in the absence of such copies, drawings, or prints, the registration shall be as valid and effectual to all intents and purposes as if such copies, drawings, or prints had been furnished.

12. That in order to prevent the frequent and unnecessary removal of the public books and documents in the office for the registration of designs, no book or document in the said office shall be removed for the purpose of being produced in any court or before any justice of the peace, without a special order of a judge of the Court of Chancery, or of one of her Majesty's superior courts of law, first had and obtained by the party who shall desire the production of the same.

13. That if application shall be made to a judge of any of her Majesty's courts of law at Westminster by any person desiring to obtain a copy of any registration, entry, drawing, print, or document, of which such person is not entitled as of right to have a copy, for the purpose of being used in evidence in any cause, or otherwise howsoever, and if such judge shall be satisfied that such copy is bona fide intended for such purpose as aforesaid, such judge shall order the registrar of designs to deliver such copy to the party applying, and the registrar of designs shall, upon payment for the same of such fee or fees as may be fixed according to the provisions of the said Designs Act in this behalf, deliver such copy accordingly.

14. That every copy of any registration, entry, drawing, print, or document delivered by the registrar of designs to any person requiring the same shall be signed by the said registrar, and sealed with his seal of office; and every document sealed with the said seal, purporting to be a copy of any registration, entry, drawing, print, or document, shall be deemed to be a true copy of such registration, entry, drawing, print, or document, and shall, without further proof, be received in evidence before all Courts in like manner and to the same extent and effect as the original book, registration, entry, drawing, print, or document would or might be received if tendered in evidence, as well for the purpose of proving the contents, purport, and effect of such book, registration, entry, drawing, print, or document, as also proving the same to be a book, registration, entry, drawing, print, or document of or belonging to the said office, and in the custody of the registrar of designs.

15. That the several provisions contained in the said Designs Acts (so far as they are not repugnant to the provisions of this act) relating to the transfer of designs, to cancelling and amending registration, to the refusal of registration in certain cases, to the mode of recovering penalties, to the awarding and recovering of costs, to actions for damages, to the limitation of actions, to the certificate of registration, to penalties for wrongfully using marks, to the fixing and application of fees for registration, and to the penalty for extortion, shall apply to the registration, provisional registration, and transfer of designs, sculptures, models, copies, and casts, and to the designs, sculptures, models, copies, and casts entitled to protection under this act, and to matters under this act, as fully and effectually as if those provisions had been re-enacted in this act with respect to designs, sculptures, models, copies, and casts registered and provisionally registered under this act; and the forms contained in the Designs Act, 1842, may for the purposes of this act be varied so as to meet the circumstances of the case.

16. That in the interpretation of this act the following terms and expressions shall have the meanings hereinafter assigned to them, unless such meanings shall be repugnant to or inconsistent with the context or subject-matter; that is to say—

The expression "Designs Act, 1842," shall mean an act passed in the sixth year of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act to consolidate and amend the Laws relating to the Copyright of Designs for ornamenting Articles of Manufacture:"

The expression "Designs Act, 1843," shall mean an act passed in the seventh year of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act to amend the Laws relating to the Copyright of Designs:"

SOLICITORS' AND GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, 57, Chancery-lane, London.

DIRECTORS.

Church, John Thomas, Esq.
Donne, Samuel Edward, Esq.
Fonblanque, John S. M., Esq.
Jones, William, Esq.
Maynard, Jonas Alleyne, Esq.
Merris, John Michael, Esq.

Mourilyan, Joseph Noakes, Esq.
Murray, William, Esq.
Symons, Jellinger Cookson, Esq.
Torr, John Smale, Esq.
Withall, William, Esq.
Wordsworth, Charles, Esq.

This Society presents the following advantages to the Assured:—

- First.—The security of a large subscribed Capital.
- Second.—Exemption of the Assured from all liability.
- Third.—Tables of Premiums calculated on the true law of mortality, expressly for this Office, and affording particular advantages to young lives.
- Fourth.—Participating and Non-participating Scales of Premiums. In the former the Assured are entitled to EIGHTY PER CENT, or FOUR-FIFTHS of the profits periodically, (without deduction for interest on capital or guarantee fund), either by way of addition to the sum assured, or in diminution of Premium, at the option of the Assured.
- Fifth.—Policies INDISPOTABLE, except in case of fraud.
- Sixth.—This Society gives a much larger share of profits to the Assured, and at a lower rate of Premium, than the great majority of other Life Offices.

Seventh.—Parties wishing to assure their lives without participating in the profits can do so on a lower scale of Premiums than that of a large proportion of other Offices.

Assurances may be effected through any respectable Solicitor, or by application to

CHARLES JOHN GILL, Secretary.

* * * Dissolved Lives assured at adequate Premiums.

* * * Owing to some accident we have but just received Mr. Tilsley's communication dated the 25th October. It shall appear in our next.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 2, 1850.

THE act of 1841, for abolishing the Equity Exchequer and appointing two new Vice-Chancellors, 5 Vict. c. 5, is somewhat singular in more than one respect. Sects. 20 and 21 are as follows:—"That when any vacancy shall occur in the office of the Vice-Chancellor who shall be first appointed under this act, it shall be lawful for her Majesty, by letters-patent, to appoint a fit person, being or having been a barrister-at-law of fifteen years standing at the least, to supply such vacancy; but that nothing in the act shall authorise the appointment of a successor to the Vice-Chancellor secondly appointed under the act." Now, the general notion of the reasons for this act is, that it was intended to meet the then existing state of arrears of Chancery business; and that, as it was supposed probable that when the arrears had been overcome, three Vice-Chancellors would no longer be necessary, it was intended as an experiment only to try whether three Vice-Chancellors would be more than would be permanently required. Mr. Pemberton Leigh, in his evidence before the Official Salaries Committee, says on this subject, "One of the Vice-Chancellors, I conceive, as appointed on account of the great arrears; and it is considered, that when the arrears were cleared off the business would be reduced, and that two Vice-Chancellors would be sufficient to transact the business." As the act, however, is worded, the effect of it is, that if the first vacancy had happened in the office of the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, instead of that of Sir J. Wigram, the act would have authorised a fresh appointment, and the continuance of three Vice-Chancellors. On this point, Lord John Russell, in his evidence before the same Committee, seemed to think that one of the Vice-Chancellorships would cease upon the first vacancy. But Mr. Pemberton Leigh, a greater authority on the construction of acts of Parliament, is of a different opinion. He says, "It was considered that one of the Vice-Chancellorships would cease upon a vacancy, although the act is not so worded. I apprehend the object was that there should only be two Vice-Chancellors, and that when it happened that one dropped, there should be only two kept up. But the act, as I read it, is not so worded as to produce that effect. It says, that upon a vacancy occurring in the office of the Vice-Chancellor first appointed, it shall be filled up; but that, in case of the one secondly appointed, it shall not be filled up; so that if the one first appointed should drop, his office would have to be filled up."

The vacancy has happened, as the Legislature seems to have prophetically contemplated, in the office of the Vice-Chancellor secondly appointed; and now arises a fresh singularity in the operation of the act, apparently in contradiction to its supposed intention. By the 25th section it is enacted, "that the Vice-Chancellors to be appointed in pursuance of the act shall, during the continuance in office of the present Vice-Chancellor, respectively have rank and precedence next to the Chief Baron of the Court of Exchequer; and that the Vice-Chancellor to be appointed in pursuance of the act of 53 Geo. 3, c. 24, and the Vice-Chancellors to be appointed in pursuance of this act, shall, after the death of the present Vice-Chancellor, or his resignation or removal, have rank and precedence next to the Chief Baron of the Exchequer, and, as between themselves, according to seniority of appointment." By the 26th section, the salary of any future Vice-Chancellor to be appointed under the 53 Geo. 3, c. 24, is to be £5000, per annum.

VOL. XIV.

Q Q

Taking all these clauses together, the manifest intention of the Legislature was, maintaining the superior rank of the late Vice-Chancellor of England, to abolish after his death all distinction between the Vice-Chancellors, except that arising from seniority of appointment. But by a singular omission, the provision of the 53 Geo. 3, c. 24, by which the Vice-Chancellor thereunder to be appointed is to bear the title of Vice-Chancellor of England, is not varied; so that now the successor of the late Vice-Chancellor of England will have, as it would seem, a right to the title of Vice-Chancellor of England, without reference to whether he is the senior judge or not. The words of the act are, "that it shall be lawful for his Majesty, his heirs &c., to nominate and appoint from time to time, by letters-patent &c., a fit person, being a barrister-at-law of fifteen years standing at the least, to be an additional judge assistant to the Lord Chancellor &c., and to be called Vice-Chancellor of England." If the successor of any Vice-Chancellor of England should happen to be also the senior Vice-Chancellor, there will not be anything in itself inconsistent in his having also the titular distinction of Vice-Chancellor of England. But if the Vice-Chancellor appointed on any occasion under the 53 Geo. 3, c. 24, should be a person not already a Vice-Chancellor, there will be the rather strange anomaly of the junior Vice-Chancellor having but second rank under the 5 Vict., and yet bearing the title of Vice-Chancellor of England—a distinction which, although but a distinction in name, cannot fail in the eyes at least of the general public, to give a sort of superior rank.

It cannot be supposed that this was intended by the act of the 5 Vict., but such is, unless we have greatly misunderstood it, its effect; and it thus affords another instance of the carelessness with which acts of Parliament so frequently do, in effect, just the opposite of what they were plainly intended to do.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 9, 1850.

WITH the political or religious propriety of the attempts lately made by the Pontiff of Rome to assert spiritual authority within the dominions of the Queen of England, we do not concern ourselves in this journal; but to inquire into the legality of the acts of those who have thought fit, not merely to accept and to publish the Papal manifesto, purporting to divide this country into Roman Catholic diocesan districts, to be under the spiritual authority of the Pope, but in the pulpit to assert episcopal authority over counties in this realm, as derived from the authority of his Holiness, is within our province; and, finding that it has been boldly asserted that such acts are legal, we will proceed to shew reasons for a contrary opinion.

There can, we conceive, be no question that the acts of those Roman Catholic ecclesiastics who have recently declared from their places in the pulpit, their episcopal authority as derived from the Roman Pontiff, could be within the act of the 1 Eliz. c. 1, if that act remained in full force. The words of the 16th section of the act are, "And to the intent that all usurped power and authority, spiritual and temporal, may for ever be early extinguished, and never to be used or obeyed within this realm, or any other your Majesty's dominions or countries, may it please your Highness that it may be further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that any foreign prince, person, prelate, state, or potentate, spiritual or temporal, shall, at any time after the last day of this session of Parliament, use, enjoy, or exercise in any manner of power, jurisdiction, superiority, authority, pre-eminence, or privilege, spiritual or ecclesiastical, within this realm, or within any other your Majesty's dominions or countries that now be or hereafter shall be, but from thenceforth the same shall be clearly abolished out of this realm, and all other your Highness's dominions, for ever; any statute, ordinance, custom, constitutions, or any other matter or cause whatsoever to the contrary in anywise notwithstanding."

The 27th, 28th, 29th, and 30th sections describe and provide for the punishment of those who shall offend under the statute; and offenders under the statute are. "any person or persons dwelling or inhabiting within this your realm, or in any other your Highness's realms or dominions, of what estate, dignity, or degree soever he or they be, who, after the end of thirty days next after the determination of this session of this present Parliament, shall, by writing, printing, teaching, preaching, express words, deed, or act, advisedly, maliciously, and directly affirm, hold, stand with, set forth, maintain, or defend the authority, pre-eminence, power, or jurisdiction, spiritual or ecclesiastical, of any foreign prince, prelate, person, state, or potentate whatsoever, heretofore claimed, used, or usurped, within this realm, or any dominion or country being within or under the power, dominion, or obedience of your Highness, or shall advisedly, maliciously, and directly put in ure or execute anything for the extolling, advancement, setting forth, maintenance, or defence of any such pretended or usurped jurisdiction, power, pre-eminence, and authority, or any part thereof."

This act was, as to so much of it at least as we have quoted, in force till the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 102. By that act, which repealed a considerable number of anti-catholic statutes, was repealed, inter alia, so much of the 1 Eliz. as provided for the punishment of the second and third offences under the statute, but left subsisting the punishments provided for the first offence, viz. for feiture of goods and chattels. The 9 & 10 Vict. c. 58, went further, and repealed so much of the 1 Eliz. c. 1, "as makes it punishable to affirm, hold, stand with, set forth, maintain, or defend, as therein is mentioned, the authority, pre-eminence, power, or jurisdiction, spiritual or ecclesiastical, of any foreign prince, prelate, person, state, or potentate, theretofore claimed, used, or usurped, within this realm, or any dominion or country being within or under the power, dominion, or obedience of her Highness, or to put in ure or execute anything for the extolling, advancement, setting forth, maintenance, or defence of any such pretended or usurped jurisdiction, power, pre-eminence, and authority, or any part thereof, or to abet, aid, procure, or counsel any person so offending: provided always, and be it declared, that nothing in this enactment contained shall authorise or render it lawful for any person or persons to affirm, hold, stand with, set forth, maintain, or defend any such foreign power, pre-eminence, jurisdiction, or authority; nor shall the same extend further than to the repeal of the particular penalties and punishments therein referred to, but in all other respects the law shall continue the same as if this enactment had not been made."

Now, beyond doubt, although the statute of Elizabeth does not, in terms, say, that to maintain, &c. the spiritual authority of a foreign potentate or prelate is unlawful, yet it is perfectly clear that to do so was under that statute unlawful, because it would be absurd to say, that a statute, which visited a particular act with penal consequences, did not make that act unlawful. All that the 9 & 10 Vict. does is to take away the particular penalties and punishments directed by the 1 Eliz.; it expressly leaves the law, as to the lawfulness or unlawfulness of the acts defined in the 1 Eliz., as it was before the act of Victoria; and consequently, as the acts were by the 1 Eliz. made unlawful they are still unlawful.

In a case of this kind it is more material to ascertain whether an act is unlawful, than what is the remedy. The remedy in this case might be trifling, almost ridiculous; for as a breach of an act of Parliament, not prescribing a special punishment, is merely a misdemeanour, we suppose, that if his Eminence Cardinal Wiseman should think fit to assert publicly in this country his authority, as derived from the Pope, of Archbishop of Westminster, he would not be liable to any very severe measure of actual punishment. But if it be clear, that to carry into effect the recent mandate of the Pontiff of Rome is unlawful, the knowledge that that is so, will have great influence over the minds of good and wise and prudent men, and may deter them from supporting it, whatever might be their personal sectarian feelings and wishes in regard to an open question. And further, it may be thought, that, trifling though the punishment would be, persons possessing the real dignity of cardinals, or the supposed dignity of archbishops and bishops, would shrink from the ignominy or ridicule of a common fine, or a few weeks imprisonment.

MASTER IN CHANCERY.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed William Gilbertson, Gent., of Preston, Lancashire, to be a Master Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

Correspondence.

Inland Revenue Office, Oct. 25, 1850.

Sir,—I have read the letter signed "Oneratus" in THE JURIST of Saturday last, with your note appended. It has not been my habit to reply to communications of this nature, touching any particular view or opinion given in my Treatise on the Stamp Laws, although I have not failed to take advantage of any information that could be derived from remarks from time to time appearing in any of the legal periodicals upon the subject of those laws, whether made in reference to that work or otherwise; my recollection, as I write, serving to bring to my mind many excellent articles which have been occasionally published in THE JURIST; and I should not now take notice of the letter of "Oneratus" but for the note, which gives weight and authority to it. The alarm expressed by "Oneratus" on discovering my supposed erroneous opinions, lest they should affect the proper execution of the act at the "new court of stamp law," was needless; but I am led to allude to it only by your suggestion of the possibility of an intimation on my part to settle the point, whether the decisions referred to are right or wrong, by my own dictum.

I have certainly felt called upon now and then to express, somewhat strongly, my opinion on certain questions relating to stamp-duty, but I have never arrogated the right to determine any, nor have I set myself up as an oracle. My reasons have generally accompanied my opinion, the only object I have at any time had in view being, to assist the Profession in coming to a correct conclusion upon points frequently of great difficulty: it was, therefore, with a little regret that I read your remark. Upon the only point, however, in the letter of "Oneratus" which requires any discussion, I have no difficulty; and I think that, on a little consideration, you will concur in the view I have taken of the provision relating to the duty to which unstamped instruments, executed before the 11th instant, are now liable.

I have referred in my Treatise to the cases of Doe v. Whittington, (4 Taunt. 20); Buckworth v. Simpson, (1 C. M. & R. 834); and Deakin v. Pennell, (2 Exch. 329), as establishing the proposition, that an instrument is chargeable with the duty in force at the time of its being brought to be stamped, although such duty may vary from that which was payable when the instrument was executed. These decisions, of course, proceed upon the absence of all special enactment upon the subject, and upon the general construction of the statutes; but "Oneratus" seems to think that the judgment in the last case was pronounced in the face of a particular provision bearing or intended to bear upon the point; for he observes that the 7 Vict. c. 21, repealed the existing duty on certain agreements, and substituted a duty of 2s. 6d., with an express exception of agreements previously executed. This is a mistake; there is no such exception, and you have probably been led away by the observation. There are, as you are no doubt aware, many duties, denominated "stamp duties," which are not denoted by stamps, but are collected periodically, and for which credit is sometimes given; and others, legacy-duties for instance, payment of which is frequently greatly deferred, although due. It is therefore usual, in repealing stamp-duties, to insert a saving of all arrears; and such a saving is that to which "Oneratus" refers. The act alluded to (7 Vict. c. 21) repeals various duties, and contains the usual saving, in these words, viz. "save and except so much and such parts of the said duties respectively as shall have accrued or been incurred before or upon the passing of this act, and shall then, or at any time afterwards, be or become due or payable, and remain in arrear and unpaid; all which duties, so remaining in arrear and unpaid as aforesaid, shall be recoverable by the same ways and means, and with such and the same penalties, as if this act had not been passed." Now, without stopping to inquire whether there were any other duties, amongst those repealed, to which this saving could apply, and therefore whether it was necessary at all, or not, it is quite certain that it could have no reference whatever to the duty on an agreement; the language is not, in any respect, applicable to such a duty. If an agreement be not stamped, the duty is not, in the sense in which the term is used, in arrear, and it is not recoverable by the Crown. So far as agreements, therefore, are concerned, there is not, as "Oneratus" seems to consider, any exception from the repeal. On turning to the recent act, (13 & 14 Vict. c. 97), the saving will be found to be wholly of a different character. The first clause recites several acts granting stamp-duties, and enacts, that from and after the 10th day of October, 1850, certain of those duties shall cease and determine, and shall be and they are thereby repealed; and that in lieu thereof certain other duties shall be payable; and then follows a proviso thus:—"Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall extend to repeal or alter any of the said duties now payable in relation to any deed or instrument which shall have been signed or executed by any party thereto, or which shall bear date, before or upon the 10th day of October, 1850." Now, I will ask, can any form of words be devised which shall more plainly or distinctly lead to the proposition that I have laid down, but with which "Oneratus" quarrels? Does it not, in unequivocal terms, save the repeal of, and therefore keep alive, the stamp-duties on instruments made or dated prior to the 11th October? If it does not, I am unable to conjecture for what purpose it was intended; it is impossible that it could have been to point out when the new duties were to commence; the language is altogether inconsistent with such a construction. It had been previously enacted, in the same clause, that these duties should take effect from and after the 10th October, and then comes the proviso to say, not to what the new duties shall apply, but to what they shall not apply; declaring, in terms not to be mistaken by any one who reads attentively, that the old duties shall remain and continue in respect of all instruments made or bearing date before the period fixed for the commencement of the new duties: and it is consistent with reason that this should be so, the propriety and necessity of a provision having this effect being obvious, under the circumstances. I have said sufficient to lead you to a further consideration of the point, and I am mistaken in my notice of the principles upon which THE JURIST is conducted, if you have not the candour to admit the error into which you have been led, on being satisfied of it. I shall be sorry if you still differ from me, but, should it be so, I am content, so far as I am concerned, to leave the point for the judgment of the Profession.

Upon the other objection, as to my exposition of the clause relating to the stamping of instruments, I have but little to say. I am unable satisfactorily to account for the note alluded to. There cannot be two opinions upon the construction of the clause. The observation was, I have no doubt, made before the law, and it escaped me to rectify it afterwards; when, however, I accidentally discovered it, in applying the law in the course of my official duties, it gave me but momentary uneasiness, seeing that it could have no injurious effect, as the enactment could only be acted upon by the office, when the proper interpretation would be put upon it. You will find it corrected in the second edition, published about a fortnight since, several days before your notice in THE JURIST.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

HUGH TILLEY.

[We are sorry that Mr. Tilley has misunderstood us. When we said that he could not mean to oppose his own dictum to the authorities, we meant, not to hint the contrary, but to shew that, as he had expressed a positive opinion, it must have been founded on the terms of the new act, and not on any disapproval of the decisions on the old enactments. In fact, however, there is much to be said against those decisions, though convenience is greatly in their favour, and Mr. Tilley in his Treatise (p. 5) cites them without comment.]

Assuming, with Mr. Tilley, that Doe v. Whittington, Buckworth v. Simpson, and Deakin v. Penniell are sound or at least binding authorities, we are still of opinion that an instrument executed before the passing of the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 97, and taken to be stamped after the 10th October, 1850, must be stamped with the same stamp which would be required if it were executed at the time of stamping. To our apprehension it is perfectly clear that the new act has nothing to do with the matter beyond raising the question by altering the stamps. The point is important, and deserves discussion, though, like most questions on the stamp laws, it can scarcely be made interesting.

It is admitted, that the stamping of instruments executed without a stamp before the new act is to be done under the authority of the old enactments for that purpose, and not under the provisions of the new act, which are confined to instruments executed after the 14th August, 1850. Now, the Stamp Acts imposed duties on various instruments, which were to be paid, and the stamps denoting the payment affixed, before the execution of the instruments. But for the special enactments in question, no stamp could (except in a few cases) be affixed to an instrument after execution. Executed instruments, then, are stamped under those special enactments—unexecuted instruments, under the general Stamp Acts for the time being in force. There are thus two classes of stamps: stamps to be used for instruments before execution, being the stamps prescribed by the general Stamp Acts for the time being in force; and stamps to be used for instruments after execution, being the stamps prescribed by the enactments for stamping executed instruments applicable to the instruments in question. What are those stamps in the case under consideration? The authorities tell us that they are the stamps which, under the laws in force at the time of stamping, would be required for unexecuted instruments of the same kind. It is only under those special enactments that any stamps can be affixed on such instruments; and the stamps must be those prescribed by them.

Then does the proviso, cited by Mr. Tilley from the new act, alter the effect of those enactments? The new act does not recite the acts under which executed instruments are stamped, but it does recite certain acts (55 Geo. 3, c. 184, and 5 Geo. 4, c. 117) granting duties on certain unexecuted instruments, some of which duties it repeals, and provides, "that nothing herein contained shall extend to repeal or alter any of the said duties now payable in relation to any deed or instrument which shall have been signed or executed by any party thereto or which shall bear date before or upon the 10th October, 1850." Mr. Tilley says that this is superfluous in respect of instruments stamped before execution. We shall shew presently that it is not so; but whether superfluous or not as to such instruments, it is plain, either that it does not refer to any other than "the said duties," (i. e. the duties on unexecuted instruments), or if it do refer to the duties on executed instruments also, that it leaves them on the same footing on which they previously stood, the saving being then understood to refer as well to the special provisions in the 12th section for stamping executed instruments, as to the duties on unexecuted instruments mentioned in the schedule. If, as Mr. Tilley says, no duty is "payable" to or demandable by the Crown on an executed and unstamped instrument, the proviso must necessarily be confined to unexecuted instruments.

The stat. 37 Geo. 3, c. 136, authorised the stamping of executed instruments on payment of a penalty and of the duty "by law payable," which in Buckworth v. Simpson was held to mean, payable on such an instrument by the law in force at the time of stamping. The statutes in force when that case was decided are the statutes under which instruments executed before the 15th August, 1850, and unstamped, are now to be stamped. They were in force when the stamp-duties were altered by the 48 Geo. 3, c. 149, and also when the duties were altered by the 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, and when the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 21, was passed, and have been held to be unaffected by expressions in those acts much stronger than the proviso in the new act. The 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, repealed all the stamp-duties on deeds and instruments, and legacies and successions, imposed by the 48 Geo. 3, c. 149, and certain duties on pawnbrokers' licenses and policies of insurance, from the 31st August, 1815, and the yearly per-centage duties on fire insurances from the 28th September, 1815, "save and except such of the said respective duties, or so much and such parts thereof respectively, as shall have become due or payable before or upon those days, and remain in arrear or unpaid afterwards; all which duties or parts of duties so in arrear or remaining to be paid as aforesaid shall be recoverable by the same ways and means, and with such and the same penalties, and in such and the same manner in all respects, as if this act had not been made." There is a very similar saving in the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 21. Mr. Tilley says that these savings relate only to arrears of duties collected periodically, and not to the duty, for instance, on an agreement, which, he adds, cannot be in arrear, and is not recoverable by the Crown. It is possible that that was the meaning of the framers of the acts, but they have failed to express it; and though Mr. Tilley is probably right in saying, that throughout the chaos of the Stamp Acts there is not to be found any provision giving the Crown, in express terms, a remedy for stamp-duties on executed instruments, the duties on instruments executed without a stamp are certainly debts to the Crown. The duty is charged "for and in respect of" the instrument—prepayment is directed, and the stamp is declared to be a discharge. Penalties are imposed on certain persons in case of non-payment; but though the persons to pay the duty are not otherwise indicated, it is not the less payable and in arrear while the instrument remains unstamped. That this is the meaning of the proviso in the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 21, is conclusively shewn by the nature of the duties to which that act is confined—namely, the duties on policies of marine insurance, agreements, and certain powers of attorney. If, as Mr. Tilley suggests, the proviso in that act was superfluous and inapplicable, the same may be said of the proviso in the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 97. In addition to the saving cited from the 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, it is to be observed, that the duties in that act were imposed only "for and in respect of the vellum, &c. upon which such instruments, &c. shall be written or printed." No duty was imposed on instruments previously executed and unstamped.

Such being the language which has already been held to have had no effect on the special enactments as to stamping executed instruments, does the new act shew an intention to interfere with them? If any such intention had existed, the enactments intended to be altered would doubtless have been referred to, as they are referred to in general terms by the 12th section. But the 1st section does not refer to them. It enacts, "that from and after the 10th October, 1850, the several stamp-duties now payable in Great Britain and Ireland respectively under or by virtue &c., for or in respect of the several instruments, matters, and things described or mentioned in the said schedule to this act annexed, and whereon other duties are by this act granted and imposed, shall respectively cease and determine, and shall be and the same are hereby repealed, and in lieu and instead thereof, there shall be granted, raised, levied, collected, and paid, in and throughout the United Kingdom of &c., for and in respect of the said several instruments, matters, and things, or for or in respect of the vellum, &c. upon which the same shall be written, the several duties" specified in the schedule. So far, it appears that the new duties are to commence and be paid from and after the 10th October, 1850. But in respect of what instruments? The Legislature thinks it necessary to explain. Possibly the words already cited were definite enough to enable the Courts to answer that question; but if the clause had stopped here, the answer would have been different from that furnished under the proviso which follows:—"Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall extend to repeal or alter any of the said duties now payable in relation to any deed or instrument which shall have been signed or executed by any party thereto, or which shall bear date, before or upon the said 10th day of October, 1850." So that the duties formerly payable are the duties to be paid in relation to any instrument bearing date before or upon the 10th October, 1850, though such instrument was not executed by any party before that day—a very important qualification of the preceding enactment, and fully sufficient to account for the proviso. It is evident that the proviso was inserted for the sole purpose of explaining, that instruments executed by any party, or bearing date, before the 11th October, were to remain subject to the old rules; and we have seen that these rules were—first, that in case an instrument within their scope was stamped before execution, certain duties imposed by the old acts should be payable; secondly, that in case an instrument within the old rules should not be stamped before execution, it might be stamped at any time after execution on payment of a certain penalty and the duty for the time being payable on instruments of the like nature.

With respect to the other point, Mr. Tilley must excuse us, as well as our correspondent, for omitting to notice the correction in the second edition, because he says, in the first page of that edition, that he has not found any errors in the former edition, except typographical errors.—Ed.]

REGULA GENERALIS.

ORDER OF COURT.

November 2, 1850.

The Right Hon. THOMAS LORD TRURO, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, by and with the advice and assistance of the Right Hon. HENRY LORD LEXDALE, Master of the Rolls, and the Right Hon. the Vice-Chancellor Sir JAMES LEWIS KNIGHT BRUCE, and the Hon. the Vice-Chancellor Sir ROBERT MORRIS ROLFE, doth hereby, in pursuance of an act of Parliament passed in the session of Parliament holden in the thirteenth and fourteenth years of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act to diminish the Delay and Expense of Proceedings in the High Court of Chancery in England," and in pursuance and execution of all other powers enabling him in that behalf, order and direct that all and every the rules, orders, and directions hereinafter set forth shall henceforth be, and for all purposes be deemed and taken to be, GENERAL RULES AND ORDERS OF THE HIGH COURT OF CHANCERY; viz.:—

Introductory.

I. The several Orders comprised in the General Order of the 3rd April, 1828, which are respectively numbered 7, 9, and 10; and the Order comprised in the General Order of the 21st December, 1833, which is numbered 19; and the Order comprised in the General Order of the 9th May, 1839, which is numbered 6; and the several Orders or parts of Orders comprised in the General Order of the 8th May, 1845, which are respectively numbered as the 2nd article of the 14th of the said Order, and the 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 20th, 21st, 22nd, 23rd, 24th, 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th, 30th, and 31st articles of the 16th of the said Order; and the several Orders comprised in the said last-mentioned General Order, which are respectively numbered 17, 19, 38, 39, 40, 41, and 42; and all other Orders and parts of Orders, so far as such other Orders and parts of Orders are inconsistent with these Orders, but not further or otherwise, are hereby abrogated and discharged.

II. All former Orders and parts of Orders not specified in Order I, so far as the same are now in force, and consistent with these Orders, or applicable to the same, or the subject-matter thereof, are to remain in full force and effect.

When these Orders are to come into Operation.

III. These Orders are, as to all suits or matters now pending or hereafter to be commenced, to take effect on this 2nd November, 1850.

Exceptions to Pleadings, &c. for Scandal, Impertinence, or Insufficiency.

IV. The times of vacation are not to be reckoned in the computation of the time allowed for filing or setting down exceptions for scandal, impertinence, or insufficiency, in cases where the time is not limited by notice given pursuant to the 13th of these Orders.

V. These Orders do not apply to any reference for scandal, impertinence, or insufficiency pending before any of the Masters at the time when these Orders come into operation; but as to all such references, the existing Rules and Orders of the Court are to remain in force.

VI. No order is to be made for leave to file exceptions nunc pro tunc.

VII. A defendant, whose answer is not excepted to, or set down for hearing on former exceptions, alleging that the plaintiff is prosecuting him in this court and also at law for the same matter, may, upon the expiration of eight days after his answer, or further answer, is filed, obtain, as of course, on motion or petition, the usual order for the plaintiff to make his election in which court he will proceed.

VIII. After the filing of a defendant's answer, the plaintiff has six weeks within which he may file exceptions thereto for insufficiency.

If he does not file exceptions within six weeks, such answer on the expiration of the six weeks is to be deemed sufficient.

IX. A defendant desiring to prevent exceptions to his answer for insufficiency being set down for hearing, has for that purpose only eight days after the filing of such exceptions within which he may submit to the same.

X. If a defendant, not being in contempt, submits to exceptions to his answer for insufficiency before the plaintiff has set them down for hearing, he is allowed three weeks from the date of the submission within which he is to put his further answer to the bill.

XI. The plaintiff, having filed exceptions for insufficiency to a defendant's answer, is not to set them down for hearing before the expiration of eight days from the filing of such exceptions, unless in a case of election he is required, by notice in writing from such defendant, to set them down in four days, pursuant to the 13th of these Orders, or in a case where the common injunction may be obtained or retained on the allowance of such exceptions.

XII. Exceptions to answers for insufficiency, or to any pleading or other matter depending before the Court for scandal or impertinence, or for scandal and impertinence, are to be set down for hearing by the Registrar, at the request of the party filing the same, upon the production of a certificate of the Clerk of Records and Writs of the filing of such exceptions, or (in the case of exceptions to an answer for insufficiency) of the filing of a further answer, and the same are to be advanced and put in the paper for hearing on an early day; and the party setting down any such exceptions shall, on the day on which the same shall be so set down, serve a notice thereof on the party whose pleading or other matter is excepted to, otherwise the said exceptions shall be deemed not set down.

XIII. A defendant, whose answer is excepted to, alleging that the plaintiff is prosecuting him in this court and also at law for the same matter, may, by notice in writing, require the plaintiff to set down the exceptions within four days from the service of the notice.

And if the plaintiff does not set down such exceptions within such four days, such defendant is entitled, as of course, on motion or petition, to obtain the usual order for the plaintiff to make his election in which court he will proceed.

XIV. The plaintiff, having filed exceptions for insufficiency to a defendant's answer, is to set them down for hearing after the expiration of eight days, but within fourteen days from the filing of such exceptions.

If he does not, the answer on the expiration of such fourteen days is to be deemed sufficient.

XV. The plaintiff, having shewn exceptions to a defendant's answer for insufficiency as cause against dissolving an injunction, is to set down such exceptions for hearing at the latest on the day next after shewing such exceptions as cause.

If he does not, the injunction is dissolved.

XVI. After the filing of exceptions to a defendant's answer for insufficiency, and any further answer put in, the plaintiff has fourteen days from the filing of such further answer within which he may set down the old exceptions.

If the old exceptions be not set down within fourteen days after such further answer put in, the answer is, on the expiration of such fourteen days, to be deemed sufficient.

XVII. After exceptions to an answer for insufficiency are set down for hearing, if a defendant, not being in contempt, submits to answer, or the Court holds the answer to be insufficient, the Court may, in such cases, appoint the time within which such defendant is to put in his further answer.

If such defendant does not obtain time from the Court, or does not answer within the time which the Court allows, the plaintiff may sue out process of contempt against such defendant.

XVIII. The answer of a defendant is to be deemed sufficient—

1. If no exception for insufficiency be filed thereto within six weeks after the filing of such answer.

2. If, exceptions being filed, the plaintiff does not set them down for hearing within fourteen days after the filing thereof.

3. If, within fourteen days after the filing of a further answer, the plaintiff does not set down the old exceptions.

XIX. If, after a defendant's second or third answer is filed, the plaintiff sets down the old exceptions for insufficiency, then the particular exception or exceptions to which he requires a further answer is or are to be stated in the notice of setting down such exceptions.

XX. If, upon the hearing of exceptions, the answer be held sufficient, it shall be deemed to be so from the date of the order made on the hearing; and if the defendant submit to answer without an order from the Court, the answer shall be deemed insufficient from the date of the submission.

XXI. The Court, holding a first or second answer to be insufficient, may appoint the time within which a defendant who is not in contempt is to file a further answer.

XXII. Upon a third answer being held to be insufficient, the Court may order the defendant to be examined upon interrogatories to the points held to be insufficient, and to stand committed until he shall have perfectly answered the interrogatories; and the defendant is to pay such costs as the Court shall think fit to award.

XXIII. No pleading or other matter depending before the Court is to be set down for hearing, for scandal or impertinence, unless exceptions are taken in writing, and signed by counsel, describing the particular passages which are alleged to be scandalous or impertinent.

XXIV. Where any person or party having filed exceptions to any pleading or other matter depending before the Court for scandal, and any person or party having filed such exceptions for impertinence, does not set the same down for hearing within six days after the filing thereof, such exceptions are to be considered as abandoned, and the person or party by whom such exceptions were filed is to pay to the opposite party such costs as may have been incurred by such party in respect of such exceptions.

XXV. Upon the production of an order, made upon its being held that any pleading or other matter depending before the Court is scandalous or impertinent, the officer having the custody or charge of such pleading or other matter is to expunge from such pleading or other matter such parts thereof as the Court has held to be scandalous or impertinent, and thereupon the person or party requiring such scandalous or impertinent matter to be expunged is to pay to the officer expunging the same the same fee as on the like occasion has heretofore been paid.

Orders of Course.

XXVI. Applications to discharge, reverse, or alter any order made on motion or petition of course by the Lord Chancellor, the Master of the Rolls, or one of the Vice-Chancellors, are to be made to the judge to whom special applications, in the cause or matter in which such order is made, ought to be made according to the practice of the Court, and the General Rules and Orders applicable thereto.

XXVII. Every petition or motion paper for a reference, under the 19th section of the said act, is to be marked at or near the top or upper part thereof, in the same manner as a bill is now marked, with the name of the Lord Chancellor and one of the Vice-Chancellors, or with the name of the Master of the Rolls; and every order for any such reference is to be marked in the same manner as the said petition or motion paper, and the matter in which such order is made is thenceforth to be considered as attached to the court of the judge whose name shall be so marked upon such order, in like manner and for the like purpose as causes are attached to such court, but shall be subject to be transferred from such court, in the same manner as causes are so transferred; and the provisions of the Order comprised in the General Order of the 5th May, 1837, which is numbered 15, and of the General Order of the 5th August, 1842, shall apply to every matter so attached.

Fees.

XXVIII. The fees to be received and taken by the Registrars and their clerks, and by the Clerks of Records and Writs, and their clerks respectively, for filing a special case and all proceedings thereupon, are to be the same as are now received and taken by them respectively for filing a bill and for proceedings in suits instituted by bill, and the fees to be received and taken by the Registrars and their clerks for setting down exceptions for scandal, impertinence, and insufficiency, and for orders made thereon, are to be the same as are now received and taken for setting down exceptions, and for orders made thereon.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 16, 1850.

THE result of the numerous authorities upon the acceptance of goods sufficient to satisfy the Statute of Frauds is stated in the text-books* to amount to this—that the vendor on the one hand must be precluded from retaining any lien, and the purchaser on the other from objecting to the quantity or quality of the goods. It is also added as a rule, that if the purchaser deals with the commodity as if it were in his actual possession, this will supersede the necessity of proving an actual receipt. The Court of Queen's Bench have, however, recently decided that there may be a sufficient acceptance of goods under the statute, although the right of the buyer to object that the goods do not comply with the terms of the contract of sale still remains. (Morton v. Tibbett, 14 Jur., part 1, p. 669).

The facts of the case were as follows:—A verbal contract was entered into for the purchase of fifty quarters of wheat according to sample, each quarter to be of a specified weight. The next day the wheat (without being weighed) was delivered by the plaintiff (the vendor) on board the lighter of a general carrier by canal, sent for that purpose by the defendant (the buyer), and on that day the defendant sold the wheat, by the same sample, and on the same terms as to the weight, to one Hampson, and directed the carrier to convey it to him. The wheat, immediately upon its arrival, was found by Hampson not to be of the weight stipulated for, and the same day he gave notice of his rejection of the contract to the defendant, who thereupon communicated with the plaintiff, and declined to receive the wheat. In an action for the price of the goods, the jury were held justified in finding a sufficient acceptance and receipt to render the contract valid. Lord Campbell, in delivering judgment, observed, that some cases had proceeded upon a supposition that there must first have been a receipt, and after that an actual acceptance of the goods, but that the words of the statute are, "except the buyer shall accept part of the goods so sold, and actually receive the same," shewing that the acceptance is to precede, or at all events to be contemporaneous with, the actual receipt of the goods, and not to be a subsequent act after the goods have been received, weighed, measured, or examined. The fact of part performance, however minute, dispensing with a written memorandum, was also relied upon, as proving that the condition imposed is not a complete fulfilment of the contract to the satisfaction of the buyer.

The following cases, which were cited for the defendant, were then examined in the judgment:—

Howe v. Palmer, (3 B. & Al. 321), in which, though the vendor had measured off and set apart the goods purchased, yet they were to remain in the possession of the vendor until called for, and therefore the purchaser neither accepted nor received the goods.

Tempest v. Fitzgerald, (3 B. & Al. 680), in which the horse purchased was to remain in the vendor's possession until the purchaser fetched it away, and paid for it; and the Court decided that there was no acceptance, on the ground that it was a ready money bargain, and that the defendant would acquire no property in the horse until the money was paid.

Hanson v. Armitage (5 B. & Al. 557) and Norman v. Phillips, (14 M. & W. 277), where the only delivery was to a carrier for the purchaser, and it was held not to amount to an acceptance.

* See Chitty on Contracts, 344, 4th ed.; Taylor on Evidence, 703; and Selwyn's Nisi Prius, 869, 9th ed.

Carter v. Toussaint (5 B. & Al. 855) and Smith v. Surman, (9 B. & Cr. 561), where the goods always remained in the possession and under the control of the vendor. In reference to the last-mentioned case, Lord Campbell observed, "That there can be no acceptance and receipt by the purchaser, while the lien of the vendor remains, is clear enough, for the vendor's lien necessarily supposes that he retains the possession of the goods." The Court of Queen's Bench, in the principal case, approved of these decisions, (though not of all the reasons and dicta mixed up with them), and relied upon the fact that the purchaser had exercised acts of ownership over the goods; that he could not have resold them and altered their destination without having accepted and received them; that he ought not to be allowed to say that he had done so; and that at any rate it was evidence whence acceptance and receipt might be inferred by the jury. Such a finding had been sanctioned, under similar circumstances, in Chaplin v. Rogers, (1 East, 192); Blenkinsopp v. Clayton, (1 J. B. Moo. 328); Edan v. Dudfield, (1 Q. B. 302); and see Hart v. Pattley (3 Camp. 528) and Bushel v. Wheeler, (8 Jur., part 1, p. 352).

To these may be added the decision in Saunders v. Topp, (18 L. J., Ex., 374), which was not cited in the principal case, where the defendant had selected some sheep from the plaintiff's flock, and verbally agreed to purchase them, and the plaintiff, by the defendant's orders, afterwards delivered them at a field of the defendant's, whence the defendant had them removed, by his own man, to his farm; and on their arrival there, the defendant saw and counted them, and said they were all right: this was held evidence for the jury of acceptance, although the next day the defendant wrote to the plaintiff repudiating the sheep as not being those he had purchased, and sent them back to the plaintiff.

It may, we think, be assumed that the Court were of opinion that a mere delivery to a carrier named by the vendee is not an acceptance within the statute, because otherwise they would have decided the case on this ground, as being the most obvious and simple one, and also because they appeared to approve of the decision in Norman v. Phillips upon the reason given by the Court, that the carrier was only an agent for the purpose of carrying, and that the purchaser himself immediately refused to take the goods. And recent cases seem to shew, that, though the delivery to a carrier may be a delivery to the purchaser, it is not an acceptance by him, (see Johnson v. Dodson, 2 M. & W. 656; Acabal v. Levy, 10 Bing. 376; Coats v. Chaplin, 3 Q. B. 483), unless the vendee retain the goods for an unreasonable time. (Bushel v. Wheeler, 8 Jur., part 1, p. 532).

In Saunders v. Topp (supra) it was doubted whether there could be an acceptance before delivery, under the statute; and the principal case seems to answer this in the affirmative, or at all events to decide that a constructive delivery is sufficient.

The requirements for the passing of property under the statute and at common law are different, as is pointed out by Parke, B., in the above case of Saunders v. Topp, where he says, "At common law the property passes by contract of bargain and sale of a specific article; but under the statute, in order that the property should pass, there must be something more than a verbal contract—there must be a payment or an acceptance." (And see per Patteson, J., in Curtis v. Pugh, 16 L. J., Q. B., 199; and Dyer v. Cowley, 12 Jur., part 1, p. 776). And at common law, if goods, part of an entire bulk, be sold, the contract is incomplete if such part has not been distinguished and separated from the bulk. (Gillett v. Hill, 2 Cr. & M. 530; Wait v. Baker, 2 Exch. 1).

SOLICITORS' AND GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, 57, Chancery-lane, London.

DIRECTORS.
Church, John Thomas, Esq. | Mourilyan, Joseph Noakes, Esq.
Donne, Samuel Edward, Esq. | Murray, William, Esq.
Fonblanque, John S. M., Esq. | Symons, Jelling Cookson, Esq.
Jones, William, Esq. | Torr, John Smale, Esq.
Maynard, Jonas Alleyne, Esq. | Withall, William, Esq.
Morris, John Michael, Esq. | Wordsworth, Charles, Esq.

This Society presents the following advantages to the Assured—
First.—The security of a large subscribed Capital.
Second.—Exemption of the Assured from all liability.
Third.—Tables of Premiums calculated on the true law of mortality, expressly for this Office, and affording particular advantages to young lives.

Fourth.—Participating and Non-participating Scales of Premiums. In the former the Assured are entitled to EIGHTY PER CENT. or FORTY-FIFTHS of the profits periodically, (without deduction for interest on capital or guarantee fund), either by way of addition to the sum assured, or in diminution of Premium, at the option of the Assured.
Fifth.—Policies INDISPUTABLE, except in case of fraud.

Sixth.—This Society gives a much larger share of profits to the Assured, and at a lower rate of Premium, than the great majority of other Life Offices.

Seventh.—Parties wishing to assure their lives without participating in the profits can do so on a lower scale of Premiums than that of a large proportion of other Offices.

Assurances may be effected through any respectable Solicitor, or by application to

CHARLES JOHN GILL, Secretary.

* * * Dissolved Lives assured at adequate Premiums.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 23, 1850.

It cannot certainly be said that THE JURIST has ever been sluggish in the cause of law reform, and, in particular, of Chancery law reform; and if, therefore, we contend occasionally against the policy of any changes proposed or discussed, we are assured that our motives will not be misunderstood. A lecture has, it seems, been lately delivered by Mr. Field, a gentleman of the American Bar, at the Law Reform Society, in which he gave an account of the new system recently adopted in the State of New York, and adverted to that portion of it which consists in the abolition of courts of equity as such, and the amalgamation of courts of law and equity. We have already in these pages quoted and commented eulogistically upon much of the act of the New York Legislature to which Mr. Field refers, and we say, as we have already said, that there is much in it that might be usefully considered and made use of, if not in terms adopted, in England, in reforming our own procedure. When, therefore, we express dissent from the idea of amalgamating courts of equity and courts of law in this country, we do so, not at all assuming to say that the amalgamation may not be fitting and highly convenient in America; nor assuming to say that there is, in principle, anything in such amalgamation impossible or improper even for this country; but we think that in this country it would, at present at least, be inconvenient.

It is not to be denied that the differences between law and equity are not at all what the public in general supposes them to be; but though they are not the same differences, they are differences, perhaps, quite as considerable. When it is said that equity is a fixed system of law, which the judge administers with as much regard to rules and authorities as a judge of the common law, that is, no doubt, quite true; so, when it is said that equity differs from law principally, if not wholly, in its mode of procedure, its mode of trial, its mode of proof, its mode of relief, all this is also perfectly true; but if it be meant to conclude that the substantial difference resulting from the different mode of procedure is not of vast importance, that would be an exceedingly erroneous conclusion. Nor is it pretended by the advocates of amalgamation, that equitable modes of procedure and equitable relief should be abolished; what is urged is, that they should be transferred to all courts—in other words, that every court should be a court of equity and of law. Now, if all judicature, and all the traditions of judicature, in this country were abolished, and we had to begin de novo to found courts of justice, it is possible that it might be found better to make all courts, courts both of law and equity, than to attempt a division. But where, on the contrary, there is a completely settled system of courts of law, provided with all the official machinery adapted to the transaction of their peculiar business; and there is also a complete system of courts of equity, provided with corresponding official machinery—admitting, as it is admitted, that the nature of equity business is substantially different from that of common-law business; admitting that it cannot be wholly dispensed with in a complicated state of commercial society; admitting that, if different in its nature, it must require different machinery to transact it; where would be the convenience of abolishing courts of equity as such, and, in effect, transferring their business and the business of courts of law? The change would really be but a change of name, assuming that the difficulty of acquiring a concurrent knowledge of law and equity could be successfully got over. But there still remains to be considered the question, whether, looking at the difficulty of any one man acquiring a competent knowledge of both systems, anischief instead of convenience would not result from an amalgamation. As it is, it is found sufficient for the power of most men's minds, to become thorough equity lawyers, or thorough common lawyers; and if the courts were amalgamated, one of two consequences would probably follow—either certain judges and certain counsel would gradually lean to and absorb the equity business, and certain others the common law, which would be in substance a return to the old system; or, if all attempted to devote themselves to business of both kinds, few, very few would become accurate lawyers, and the result would be a much more unsettled state of the law than exists at present.

It is idle to say that if law and equity were simplified, as they ought to be, there would be no difficulty in acquiring a sufficient knowledge of both. The forms of procedure may be simplified, and doubtless will be; but the simplicity or complication of a system of laws is the result of a corresponding state of society. The state of the people dictates the laws; and the law, as a whole, can never be so simple as to be easily acquired, so long as the state of society is complicated, and its proprietary and pecuniary transactions of infinite variety.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

MICHAELMAS TERM.—14 VICTORIA.—Nov. 21, 1850.

This Court will, on Saturday, the 14th December next, hold a Sitting, and will proceed to give judgment in certain of the matters that will then be standing over for the consideration of the Court.

JOHN JERVIS.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

MICHAELMAS TERM.—14 VICTORIA.—Nov. 19, 1850.

This Court will hold sittings on Saturday the 30th November, and Monday the 2nd to Saturday the 7th December, both inclusive, and also on Monday the 16th December, and will at such sittings proceed in disposing of the business then pending in the paper of New Trials, and in the paper of Special Cases and Demurrers; also in giving judgment in all matters then standing for judgment.

MASTERS IN CHANCERY.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed the following Gentlemen to be Masters Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery:—Charles Beckington, of Newcastle-upon-Tyne; Robert Paterson, of Liverpool; John Orford the younger, of Ipswich, Suffolk.

OBSERVATIONS ON THE DEFECTS OF THE CHANCERY ORDERS OF APRIL, 1850.

A DISCUSSION took place in Vice-Chancellor Rolfe's Court on the 7th instant, in a case of Marshall v. Davis, suggesting some doubts, on the solution of which will depend whether the Chancery Orders of the 22nd April, 1850, are to be nearly a dead letter, or to effect substantial and extensive alterations in Chancery procedure.

The principle of these Orders is sufficiently good, but it is not half worked out in detail; nor are the details, so far as they are worked out, made sufficiently clear. Their first apparent great defect is the mode in which common claims have been divided from special claims, and the requirement that leave shall be obtained to file special claims. In practice, in giving leave, the Court relies upon the statement of counsel as to the general nature of the claim; nor could it be otherwise; for to suppose, as the Orders apparently do, that the Court is to read every special claim, is to suppose that the Court is to become equity draftsman to every claimant—a task which would pass the patience and powers of exertion of any Vice-Chancellor. In practice, therefore, the Court and the suitors get no more by the application for leave, than they would by the mere fact of the claim being settled by counsel. The proper course would be to give liberty to a plaintiff to file a claim in any case without any leave, requiring only that every claim should be signed by counsel. That would be sufficient to provide the only thing for which the leave is of use, viz. that the Court shall have a guarantee that its records shall not be incumbered with impertinent or improper matter. The retention of the particular forms prescribed in Schedule (A.) of the Orders, not as invariable forms, but as models, is not objectionable with reference to the cases enumerated in Order I. It is suggested, therefore, that the Orders should prescribe, that any person seeking equitable relief may in any case, instead of proceeding by bill of complaint in the usual form, file a claim*, such claim to be, in all cases, signed by counsel; and that, in the particular cases enumerated in Order I, the forms prescribed, or forms as near thereto as circumstances would admit, should be used.

The next fault of the New Orders is, that they do not with sufficient explicitness declare what is to be the force and effect of a claim. A claim is, or at any rate ought to be, the complete substitute for a bill, (so far as its structure makes that possible); it is or ought to be the complete institution of a suit; and every relief which can be obtained in a cause instituted by bill, such as an injunction, a receiver, production of documents, &c., ought to be obtainable upon a claim—that is, if claims are intended to be of any material public use. The Orders, as they stand, leave it in doubt whe-

* It may be observed, that in these remarks the writer is suggesting rather that which he conceives may possibly be obtained, than that which he considers most complete. It appears to him that the rule of the Orders should be just reversed; the proceeding by claim, without leave, should be the regular and compulsory mode of proceeding, and a bill should require leave on a special case shown for it. This assumes, of course, the claim system to undergo very extensive revision.

her a claim, either for a special injunction, or for an injunction to stay proceedings at law, can be sustained; and the better opinion is thought to be, that it cannot be sustained for either. On such a point the Orders ought to be altered.

Again, not only they do not shew clearly how production of documents, or payment of money in the hands of an executor or trustee, is to be obtained, but they leave it in the utmost doubt whether any such relief is intended to be obtained at all; and this in a system of procedure professedly designed, according to the 1st Order, for obtaining the complete administration, and of course the protection, of estates in the hands of executors and trustees.

The next defect of the Orders is their great obscurity as to the modes in which a defence is to be made; in which discovery from a defendant is to be obtained; and as to the sort of evidence on which a cause is to be heard. On these points the Orders contain nothing except what is to be found in the 12th and 13th Orders, explained, if explained they can be said to be, by the 9th. The 9th saves the general practice of the Court, so far as it is not abolished, and may therefore be thought to give to the Court power to blend the old practice with the new. The 12th Order directs that a defendant is to shew cause, if he can, and if necessary, by affidavit; and the 13th is so wide in its language, that it in effect amounts to saying that the Court may, at the hearing, do anything; but as, of course, that means anything it has power to do, and as of course also that must refer to what it has power to do within the meaning of the Orders, and as the Orders are most diplomatically obscure as to what is intended to be embraced by the claim system, the result is, that the Profession is left as completely in the dark as to how a cause instituted by claim is to be dealt with, if any real contest or difficulty arises, as if no such Orders as the 12th and 13th existed.

Now, as to the mode in which a defence is to be made, the Orders seem to require (and in practice they have been so construed) no statement at all of his case to be made by a defendant, unless he puts in an affidavit; the result of which would seem to be, either, that while the plaintiff will be confined to the case made by his claim, the defendant may ramble into all manner of matter; or that the evidence on the hearing of a cause may branch out on both sides into as much of relevant matter, not put in issue by any statement, as is usual on an ordinary motion.

This seems highly inconvenient: if a plaintiff is to state only the heads of his case, and to confine his evidence to the support of his stated case, and the defendant is to be at liberty to file affidavits de omnibus rebus et quibusdam aliis, there will be great injustice. If the hearing of a claim cause (and the motion for a decree, set by the shewing of cause, is clearly, in substance, the hearing of a cause) is to be conducted like a motion under the old practice, with liberty to each side to file affidavits without stint, till both parties are thoroughly tired, then truly there will not be, under the claim system, much saving of expense, but there will be great loss of accuracy, and diminished power of arriving at the truth. The principle of the new system is, it is apprehended, simply to substitute in pleading a statement of the heads of a case, referring only, in general, to documentary evidence, for the old plan of setting out the specific items of fact, and the documents intended to be proved. But it never could have been, at any rate never ought to have been, intended to abolish the wholesome rule of all pleading, that each party should know, before collecting his proofs, what the grounds of claim on which his adversary means to rely, and which he means to prove. The Orders are, therefore, it is conceived, defective, in not directing that defendant shall state his case as well as a plaintiff.

Then, as to the sort of evidence on which claim causes are to be decided, doubts were thrown out in the case of Marshall v. Davis, from the Bench, as well as by eminent counsel, whether the Orders could have intended a cause, involving any material, contested, and complicated state of facts, to be heard on affidavit. Certainly the Orders do explicitly include cases, as fit for common claims even, in which materially complicated states of facts may, and constantly do, arise. It would be a monstrous construction of the Orders, for instance, which should say, that art. 9 of Order I was intended only for an account of a partnership where there were no disputed facts, or that art. 8 refers only to cases where nothing is in dispute but the title. Certainly, also, the Orders do not point out explicitly whether evidence is to be taken in any other way than by affidavit. They could hardly, however, have intended that parties should be limited to the use of a species of evidence not only notoriously defective in itself, but involving these two disabilities—disability of cross-examination, and disability to compel the attendance of witnesses. Unless, however, it is to be found in the 13th Order, the Orders certainly do not provide machinery for examining witnesses before the hearing, otherwise than by affidavit. It may, indeed, be thought, that, upon the true construction of the 13th Order, the Court may, when the cause comes on, on the application of either party, or of its own authority, direct that witnesses shall be examined in the usual way, as if the cause had been instituted by bill and answer, and replication had been filed; and may give leave, if leave be necessary, to the parties to issue subpoenas to compel the attendance of witnesses. But the writer is well aware that many experienced practitioners do not acquiesce in this view; at any rate, no decision on the point has been yet judicially pronounced; nor is it possible to say that the 13th Order explicitly gives any such power.

It is manifest, however, that if claims are intended to be fit for cases of any complication or contest, machinery for the examination of witnesses on interrogatories, in the usual way, must be provided; and the Orders ought to be revised accordingly.

Again, with regard to discovery from the defendant, a claim may be filed on the faith that the facts in defence are few, and that the plaintiff is in possession of evidence to rebut them. When the defendant shews cause, it may appear, contrary to expectation, that discovery from him is necessary. Do the Orders provide for obtaining such discovery or not? On this point there is no decision. And again, the 13th Order is so wide and so vague, that it is utterly impossible to have any confident opinion on the point. It may be thought that the Court may, under such circumstances, give liberty to amend the claim, for the purpose of inserting in it specific allegations, and leave to exhibit interrogatories, founded on such allegations, to obtain discovery from the defendant. But this is pure conjecture. The Orders ought on this point also to be revised, and to give clear powers to examine a defendant, (as he may now be examined by bill), if they are meant to be applicable to any case where a deficiency of evidence can be anticipated.

To recapitulate briefly the suggestions that the writer would venture to make for alteration of the Orders.

1. No leave should be required to file a claim, but every claim should be signed by counsel; and the forms in Schedule (A.) should be distinctly given merely as models, not prescribed as forms.

2. A defendant not submitting or demurring should, within some given time from the service of the summons, (say ten days), file a counter claim, either denying the whole or part of the plaintiff's statement, or, in addition, stating any rebutting matter on which he relies. So much as he does not deny, he should be taken to admit; and he should be as much confined in his evidence to matters put in issue by his counter claim as the plaintiff is now, to that put in issue by his claim.

3. The Orders ought distinctly to give power to move for preliminary orders of all the kinds that are obtainable upon bills, and ought to provide for obtaining discovery from the defendant, in the nature of an answer to particular interrogatories, both for the general purposes of the hearing, and for the purpose of such motions as, under the old practice, must be founded on admissions in the answer. In other words, the Orders abolishing interrogatories and answers, as a general practice, ought still to leave power to obtain a partial answer for particular purposes. Any abuse of such a power would easily be checked by the discretion of the Court as to costs.

4. They should also distinctly give powers to the Court to provide for taking evidence on interrogatories, before the hearing, in the usual way; and seeing that we are in an age of innovation, it might be thought a very convenient opportunity for trying the experiment of giving to the Court power to direct, if it thinks fit, witnesses to be brought into court at the hearing, and examined vivâ voce. There can be no doubt that many very expensive issues are rendered necessary, simply because of the inability of a judge in equity to examine one or two witnesses vivâ voce.

Correspondence.

Inland Revenue Office, Somerset House,
Nov. 18, 1850.

SIR,—It was my intention not to occupy any further portion of your time or space upon the question of stamp-duties, in controversy in recent numbers of THE JURIST; indeed, I had flatteringly deceived myself into a belief that your acquiescence in my view upon the point would have rendered it unnecessary; but I am disappointed; and as you have gone somewhat deeply into the matter, and expressed your adherence to the opinion you had previously expressed, giving your reasons for so doing, it might possibly be supposed that I had abandoned my view of the question if I remained altogether silent. It would probably, in a measure, tend to establish confidence in your opinion, if I were to confess any want of ability on my part to comprehend your arguments. I do own, however, although at the risk of an imputation which it might not be altogether agreeable to hear, some little deficiency in that way. I might, if my observations had reference to an advocate, be, perhaps, induced to say that he had striven hard to get up an argument for perverting the plain meaning of an act of Parliament; but as I cannot conceive an object on your part, other than the arrival at the true construction of the enactment, I do not feel justified in applying such a remark to your reasoning; at the same time I must observe, that I think it strained to support a misconceived view of the intention of the Legislature, and altogether inapplicable to the terms in which the meaning is expressed. I entertain myself no more doubt upon the subject than of the sufficiency of the enactment to effect it; and, for the reasons stated in my former letter, I adhere to the view I at first took of the question.

I am, Sir,

Your obedient servant,

HUGH THIRLEY.

COUNTY COURT FEES.

The following Table of Fees to be taken in the County Courts established by the stat. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, on and after the 25th November, 1850, appeared in the London Gazette of Tuesday last:—

In cases within the ordinary jurisdiction of the courts, the under-mentioned poundage and fees are to be taken; but where the sum demanded is above twenty pounds, the poundage is to be taken on twenty pounds only. All fractions of a pound, for the purpose of calculating the poundage, shall be treated as an entire pound.

For every summons; sevenpence in the pound on the amount of the demand.

For every application for a summons out of the district; threepence in the pound on the amount of the demand. This sum to include every fee for such application.

Notice.—No other fee whatever is to be taken on the entry of a plaint, except for service by the high bailiff, and for affidavit of service out of the district.

For every hearing without a jury; twenty-six pence in the pound on the amount of the demand.

For every hearing with a jury; thirty-eight pence in the pound on the amount of the demand.

Judgments by consent, under the stat. 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, ss. 8, 9, and judgments upon applications in the nature of sci. fa., to be charged the same fee as on the hearing of a cause without a jury.

Notice.—No other fee whatever is to be taken for the hearing or trial of a cause, except for the service of the order by the high bailiff.

For every subpoena, (each witness); two shillings, without reference to the amount of the demand.

For entering and giving notice of a special defence; eighteenpence, without reference to the amount of the demand.

For any adjournment of a cause or other matter to another court, at the request of either party; threepence in the pound on the amount of the demand.

For paying money into or out of court, whether before or after judgment, on each payment not exceeding ten shillings; one penny: and on each payment above ten shillings; twopence in the pound on the amount of the payment.

For notice to be given, by prepaid post letter, to plaintiff, of every payment whatever made into court; twopence, without reference to the amount of the payment. Out of this fee the postage of such letter is to be paid by the clerk.

For issuing any warrant, attachment, or execution; twopence in the pound on the amount for which such warrant, attachment, or execution issues.

For taking recognisance, bond, or security for costs; fourpence in the pound on the amount of the demand.

For inquiry into sufficiency of sureties; sixpence in the pound on the amount of the demand.

For application for new trial, or to set aside proceedings; sixpence in the pound on the amount of the demand.

For every summons for commitment, under the stat. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 98; sixpence in the pound on the amount of the original demand then remaining due.

For every hearing of the matters mentioned in such summons for commitment; one shilling in the pound on the amount last aforesaid.

Notice.—No other fees than the above to be taken on any account whatever, except the high bailiff's fees for service. No application to the court is to be charged with a fee, except those above mentioned. No increase of fees shall be made by reason of there being more than one plaintiff or defendant.

HIGH BAILIFF'S FEES.

For serving every summons, order, or subpoena, within two miles of the court-house; one penny in the pound on the amount of the demand, except for the service of a summons under the stat. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 98, when the poundage is to be calculated on the amount of the original demand then remaining due.

For such service, if beyond two miles, then extra for every additional mile; sixpence, without reference to the amount of the demand.

For affidavit of service of summons out of the jurisdiction; one shilling, without reference to the amount of the demand.

For execution of every warrant or attachment against the goods or body within two miles of the court-house; one shilling in the pound on the amount for which such warrant or attachment issues.

For such execution, if beyond two miles, then extra for every additional mile; sixpence, without reference to the amount for which such warrant or attachment issues.

For keeping possession of goods till sale, per day, (including expenses of removal, storage of goods, and all other expenses whatever), not exceeding five days; sixpence in the pound on the amount for which the execution issues. [This, however, does not apply to cases of interpleader, in which the costs and expenses of possession are in the discretion of the judge.]

For carrying every delinquent to prison, including all expenses and assistants; one shilling per mile, without reference to the amount mentioned in the warrant.

For issuing warrant to clerk of another court; two shillings and sixpence, without reference to the amount mentioned in the warrant.

Where the plaintiff recovers less than the amount of his claim, so as to reduce the scale of costs, the plaintiff to pay the difference.

The several fees payable on proceedings in replevin to be regulated on the above scale, by the amount distrained for; and on proceedings for the recovery of tenements, by the yearly rent or value of the tenement sought to be recovered; but in neither case to exceed the fees payable on a demand of twenty pounds.

In cases of extraordinary jurisdiction given to the court by the consent of parties to the trial of questions under the stat. 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, s. 17, the poundage shall be taken in every such case on the sum of fifty pounds.

In cases of interpleader, the summons is to be issued to the high bailiff gratis, and the poundage for the hearing is to be estimated on the value of the goods claimed, which, in case of dispute, is to be assessed by the judge. The costs, however, of the summons, estimated on the above-mentioned value, shall be included in the general costs, which may, in the discretion of the judge, be awarded at the hearing.

Dated this 15th day of November, 1850.

COMMENTARIES OF THE LAWS OF ENGLAND. A New Edition, with copious Notes embracing all the Changes in the Law. The whole of the Text is preserved; such of the Annotations of the late J. CHITTY, Esq., as were considered useful, have been retained; and the Four Volumes have received extensive Additions by the following Gentlemen:—Vol. I., by JOHN F. HARGRAVE, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn; Vol. II., by GEORGE SWEET, Esq., of the Inner Temple; Vol. III., by RICHARD COUCH, Esq., of the Middle Temple; Vol. IV., by W. N. WELSBY, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barristers at Law.

In Six very thick octavo Volumes, price 6l. 10s. in strong cloth bds., BURN'S JUSTICE OF THE PEACE AND PARISH OFFICER. The Twenty-ninth Edition, corrected and greatly enlarged, containing the Statutes and Cases to 7 & 8 Vict., inclusive, with a New Collection of Precedents. The Title "Poor" by Mr. Commissioner BERE, of the Exeter District Court of Bankruptcy; the rest of the Work by THOMAS CHITTY, Esq., of the Inner Temple.

On introducing a new and greatly improved edition of an old-established book, like "Burn's Justice," to the notice of the Members of the Magistracy and the Legal Profession, the Publishers need only point attention to the claims which it has upon two such large and influential bodies, to ensure a success similar to that which has attended all previous editions. Since the year 1837 (the date of the last edition) a considerable number of important Statutes have been passed; by several of those Statutes the executive power of the Magistrate has been somewhat restricted, and by others extended, while the whole duties of the office have undergone too many changes not to render a New Edition (embodying every Act and decision to the present time) a valuable and necessary addition to the Libraries of Gentlemen engaged in the Local Administration of Justice. The Six Volumes have received a thorough revision; the Forms have been re-modelled, and carefully adapted to the recent changes; several new Titles (created by modern enactments) have been introduced, and great exertions have been made to ensure a correct and full development of the Law as it now stands. The title "Poor," which occupies the whole of the Fourth Volume, has again been prepared by Mr. Commissioner BERE; and his object has been to furnish the cases at full length, being satisfied that no compendious abstract, however carefully made, would supply a satisfactory Manual for those who attend the Quarter Sessions. The Marginal Notes and the Index are, however, abridgments of the Cases, so that the general principles of the Law may be ascertained without reading the fuller statement. The great utility of the Work as an authority, presenting the cases in detail, and superseding the Reports themselves, is thereby preserved, at the same time that the necessity of reading the whole is obviated by the fullness of the Marginal Notes.

The present State of the Law of Racing, Wagers, and Gaming. Also a few unreported cases; the Statutes to the present Time; with some Miscellaneous Information.

OPINIONS of the PRESS.

"There is something eminently practical in the general aspect of the book; it is small, compact of print and law, and clearly arranged and set forth."—The Jurist.

"No turf-man, betting-man, horse-dealer, stable-keeper, or in fact any other description of horseman, will be able to get on in his business without this book."—The Veterinarian.

"This is a most useful book, edited by Mr. G. H. H. Oliphant, a Barrister, and embraces every matter in which the Horse is concerned. Every question is treated of with clearness and accuracy, and the law as it exists is explained and demonstrated by recent decisions in the Courts of Law. The question respecting Derby Clubs and their legality forms a prominent portion of the work, and we unfeignedly recommend its possession to all interested in the numerous subjects on which it treats."—Bell's Life.

AN INDEX TO THE EQUITY CASES NOT OVERRULED OR OBSOLETE; reported in the House of Lords, Privy Council, and Courts of Equity in England and Ireland, from the earliest Period down to the present Time. To be completed in 3 vols. royal 8vo. By JOHN JAGOE, Esq., Barrister at Law.

The First Volume contains a Digest of all the Decisions during the Periods when Lords Lyndhurst and Cottenham were Chancellors of England, and Lord Plunkett and Sir Edward Sugden, Chancellors of Ireland.

The Second Volume will give the Pleading and Practice Cases, and the Rules, Orders, and Statutes, including those of the last Session of Parliament, and the Rules founded on them, with the Table of Cases for both Volumes, forming a complete EQUITY PRACTICE. This Volume is unavoidably postponed in order to insert the Chancery Orders of the 2nd November, and will be published in a short time.

The Third Volume, containing the early decisions which relate to the Principles of Equity not overruled or obsolete, will be ready for delivery during the Easter Term.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 30, 1850.

Among other demands for alterations in the law, is now prominently put forward, and not without much reason, a demand for a great alteration of the law of patents.

The first in order, if not in magnitude, of the vices attaching to our system of granting patents, is the inordinate expense of obtaining them. 90*l.* 18*s.* for the expense of merely obtaining an unopposed grant of a patent to one person for England alone; about 68*l.* for a like grant of a Scotch patent; and about 118*l.* for the like grant of an Irish patent—making a total of 276*l.* 18*s.* for the three kingdoms—form a tolerable price to be paid by an inventor for obtaining protection in the use of his invention. But this is not all: if the grant be opposed, the additional unavoidable fees—that is, the official fees—amount in England to about 7*l.* 14*s.* What they amount to in Scotland and Ireland we are not aware, but they are probably not much less.

If the patent be granted to more than one person, the expense in England is increased for every additional name by 18*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* The same rule prevails with regard to Irish and Scotch patents, though what is the precise increase for additional names we are not informed. To these expenses must be added, as an expense practically unavoidable, a fee of 10 guineas, in respect of each patent, to the agent who passes it. We say practically unavoidable, because, though an inventor may take his own petition and pass it through all the stages necessary to obtain a patent, the economy of such a proceeding, in lieu of availing himself of the services of a practised agent, would be something like the economy of walking on a journey of business, instead of using a railway. There is, after all this, the expense of preparing, ingrossing, and inrolling the specification—an expense which, we believe, is never known to be less than 10*l.*; and if the invention be mechanical, and of any degree of complication requiring plans, the expense attending the specification is more likely to be above than under 30*l.* Altogether it may be fearlessly asserted, that an inventor rarely sees his patent through to the last stage, viz. the inrolment of the specification, for less than 130*l.* in England; 150*l.* to 160*l.* in Ireland; and 100*l.* to 110*l.* in Scotland. These are prices which at this day are unquestionably outrageous. That they would operate as a bar to invention might, at first sight, be supposed; but we apprehend the mischief that they work in that way, is much less than the mischief they work in the way of making patents “mischievous to the State, (to use the words of the Statute of Monopolies), by raising of the prices of commodities at home,” and by withdrawing from the hands of inventors large sums of money which would, in the interest of the public, be more usefully employed in bringing their inventions to perfection, than by passing into the Treasury or into public offices. While the petition for a grant of letters-patent continues to be passed through such a multiplicity of stages as the present practice requires, it might be perhaps difficult to diminish very much the expense. But the passing an application for a patent through so many stages is absolutely useless. The plea for it of old was, that by passing a patent through the hands of many public officers, there was greater security offered for the detection of any false representation, so that the grant might be protected against making an improper grant—a very good plea when the grants by letters-patent were of Crown property or other rights by grant, which the Crown lost something which it meant to gain.

VOL. XIV.

fer, on public or private grounds, on the objects of its favour; but such a plea is obviously inapplicable to grants of letters-patent for invention, where the Crown parts with nothing, and never, in fact, makes the slightest inquiry whether there is any false representation or not.

All that is substantially requisite in granting letters-patent for inventions is, that the Crown should be satisfied by the petition, supported by the affidavit of the inventor, that he is, or believes himself to be, the inventor; that the opportunity should be offered, for any person having an interest, to oppose the grant, as is now usually done; and that the grant should be issued; and these things might be done, and well done, at one quarter of the expense now requisite.

But the greatest evil attending the law of patents is, not the expense of obtaining them, but the unsatisfactory nature of the title obtained. In the first place, it is familiar, unfortunately, to inventors as well as to lawyers, that discordance between what is technically called the title of a patent and the specification, is fatal to the patentee's claim. Now, considering that an inventor is obliged to prepare the title of his patent before he can venture openly on experiments, and that it commonly happens, that, after he has secured his right by obtaining the patent, improvements, so material as to alter the character of the invention, suggest themselves, it is not wonderful that when patents come before the Courts, there should so frequently be found a fatal variance between the title of the patent and the specification. This defect of the law has been partially remedied, it is true, by Lord Brougham's Act, which permits the cure of a defective patent by disclaimer or amendment. But the remedy is but partial; it permits a cure where the patent covers too much—that is, more than the specification describes; but not where the patent covers too little; nor where there is a substantial difference between the title and the specification—that is, where the title describes one thing, and the specification describes something essentially different.

Another objection to the title acquired by a patentee arises out of the nondescript nature of the grant, and the almost total impossibility of ascertaining whether it is incumbered; so that, on the sale of a patent, the purchaser must take his chance of the sufficiency of the title, and rely almost entirely on the covenants of the vendor. For instance, as it is quite unsettled whether letters-patent pass any legal estate, and what is the effect of the bodily possession of the letters-patent, it follows, that if a patentee mortgages or grants licenses without delivering up the letters-patent, and there is no notice of the charge indorsed, and the patentee then sells, and the purchaser takes possession of the letters-patent, it is uncertain whether he takes subject to the mortgage or license, or not, because that depends on the nature of the estate. If there is a legal estate in letters-patent, the first assignee will take it, and the subsequent charge would, of course, be postponed. If there is nothing in a patent but an equitable interest, then the question would be, whether there is virtue enough in the bodily possession of the letters-patent to give the subsequent purchaser a better title than his predecessor.

There is no mode by which a purchaser can ascertain whether there are any prior incumbrances; there is no trustee of whom inquiry can be made; there is no registry where search can be made; nor is there any course of inquiry, of which we are apprised, that can, with any degree of certainty, lead to the detection of charges. The result is, that letters-patent are, of all titles, the most unmarketable.

The Queen has been pleased, by letters-patent, to appoint Joseph Humphry, Esq., to be one of the Masters in Ordinary of the High Court of Chancery, in the room of John Edmund Dowdeswell, Esq.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

November 29, 1850.

The Rules for New Trials in Country Cases, tried before Lord Campbell at the Spring Assizes, 1850, standing in the New Trial Paper, will be taken on Friday, the 6th December next, instead of on Tuesday, the 3rd December, as previously intimated. Some Judgments will likewise be given on the 6th and also on the 7th December next. The Rules for New Trials in Country Cases, granted during Michaelmas Term, 1850, will probably be taken during the present Sittings in Banc.

By THE COURT.

This Society presents the following advantages to the Assured:—

First.—The security of a large subscribed Capital.
Second.—Exemption of the Assured from all liability.
Third.—Tables of Premiums calculated on the true law of mortality, expressly for this Office, and affording particular advantages to young lives.

Fourth.—Participating and Non-participating Scales of Premium. In the former the Assured are entitled to EIGHTY PER CENT. or FORTY-FIFTHS of the profits periodically, (without deduction for interest on capital or guarantee fund), either by way of addition to the sum assured, or in diminution of Premium, at the option of the Assured.

Fifth.—Policies INDISPURABLE, except in case of fraud.
Sixth.—This Society gives a much larger share of profits to the Assured, and at a lower rate of Premium, than the great majority of other Life Offices.

Seventh.—Parties wishing to assure their lives without participating in the profits can do so on a lower scale of Premiums than that of a large proportion of other Offices.

Assurances may be effected through any respectable Solicitor, or by application to

CHARLES JOHN GILL, Secretary.

. Diseased Lives assured at adequate Premiums.

LONDON, DECEMBER 7, 1850.

IN the present article we propose to consider the important decision of Lord Brougham in Upfill's case, (14 Jur., part 1, p. 843). The effect of the judgment may be briefly stated to be this—that a provisional committeeman of an unformed company, which is afterwards abandoned, renders himself liable as a contributory, simply by accepting shares which have been allotted to him in his character of such committeeman.

The definition of a "contributory" will be found in the 3rd section of stat. 11 & 12 Vict. c. 45. It includes "every member of a company, and every other person liable to contribute to the payment of any of the debts, liabilities, or losses thereof;" and, by the same section, the word "member" signifies "any person entitled to a share of the assets or accruing profits of any such company at the time of presenting the petition." From these definitions, and the provisions generally of the Winding-up Acts*, it is probable that the Legislature sought to comprehend within their operation many persons who would not have been liable, in an action at law, to the debts of the company. By judicial interpretation, however, the legal has been made the measure of the equitable liability; (see Cottle's case, 14 Jur., part 1, pp. 453, 655, 703); and the questions, whether a party would be charged as defendant in an action brought in respect of such debts, and whether he is chargeable as a contributory, have, upon the facts hitherto submitted to the Courts, been treated as identical†.

† We say upon the facts hitherto submitted, because we are not aware of a case where a company, being wound up, has had assets or profits, as such, for a member to share in, so as to

It would follow from this view, as indeed it has been expressly decided, that neither a provisional committeeman nor an allottee, simply as such, is a contributory. (As to committeemen, see Ex parte Carmichael, 14 Jur., part 1, p. 1014; Cottle's case, supra; Reynell v. Lewis, 15 M. & W. 517; Wylde v. Hopkins, Ib.; Barber v. Stead, 3 C. B. 946; Wilson v. Holden, 12 Jur., part 1, p. 84; and Cooke v. Tonkin, 9 Q. B. 936. As to allottees, see Ex parte Maudslay, 14 Jur., part 1, p. 1012; Woolmer v. Toby, 10 Q. B. 691; Walstab v. Spottiswoode, 15 M. & W. 501; and Fox v. Clifton, 6 Bing. 776).

The question, then, comes to this—whether the union of the two characters renders a person liable as contributory. Lord Brougham decides that it has this effect, and this is the foundation of his judgment in Upfill's case. "I presume the principle of that decision," said Rolfe, V. C., on a recent occasion*, "is, that when a provisional committeeman accepts shares in that character, he must thereby be taken to have given authority to the other members of the provisional committee to incur expenses on his account in forming the company. I confess," adds his Lordship, "that I have great difficulty in understanding the principle; but of course I bow to the authority, and shall be guided by it in cases where the facts are similar." Lord Brougham (delivering judgment in Upfill's case) expressly stated, that it appeared to him impossible to avoid the inference, that a person who accepted shares in the joint-raise a question upon the definition of "member." We should, however, suppose that a person who is simply a provisional committeeman, or allottee, would not be entitled to share in the assets or profits of an unformed company. (See Fox v. Clifton, 6 Bing. 776). And by sect. 23 of stat. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, no profits could be made before complete registration.

* Maudslay's case, (14 Jur., part 1, p. 1012).

stock of a concern which he knew was at least preparing to carry on operations, with the view of gaining profit, must be understood to be doing an act which entitled him, eventually at least, to share in the gains, and that he thus must be taken to give an implied authority to his companions on the committee to pledge his credit, so far as his rateable proportion goes, in the capital of the joint-stock, for the necessary expenses of the committee in preparing to launch the common concern.

It is obvious that this reasoning would apply equally to the position of an allottee, if the word "promoters" be substituted for "companions;" and yet an allottee would not be held liable.

We confess to the difficulty felt by Rolfe, V. C., in understanding the principle of Upfill's case; for it appears to amount to this—that two non-liabilities create one liability. The committeeman, qua committeeman, is not liable for preliminary expenses: the acceptance of the allotment by him appears to amount only to an assent to be a partner in the company when formed; thus resembling an acceptance by a stranger; and we do not see any reason why it should afford evidence of authority in the one case and not in the other. Such acceptance is not like active interference in the company's affairs, by attending meetings, paying some of the debts, and the like. There a management and superintendence are exercised, and the party may be supposed to constitute his companions his agents for incurring expenses, of which he is presumed to be cognisant. It is reasonable that the liabilities should fall on those who take an actual part in the concern; and "when persons meet to prepare the measures necessary for calling the society into existence, attendance on such meeting, and concurrence in such measures, may be strong evidence that any individual then present, and taking part in the proceedings, held himself out as a paymaster to all who executed their orders." (Per Curiam, in Lake v. The Duke of Argyll, 6 Q. B. 478). Such acts are properly admitted as evidence of implied authority, because there is a natural connexion between the proof which is tendered and that which is to be proved; but the mere fact of accepting an allotment of shares, being nothing more than a consent to be a partner at a future time, when certain conditions are performed, is not connected, naturally or legally, with a sanction to incur expenses before such conditions are performed; neither cognisance of debts being contracted, nor actual interference, nor delegation of powers to an agent, can be inferred from it. In the absence of any special agreement, not even deposits paid upon an allotment are to be applied to the expenses of forming the company. (See Moore v. Garwood, in error, 19 L. J., Ex., 15). We are not aware of any case in which the acceptance of a share in an unformed company has been tendered as evidence of an implied authority for the contracting of debts by co-committeemen, although it must have been frequently available, as, by the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, ss. 4, 28, each promoter of a company must consent to take one share at least in the proposed undertaking; and it is well known to have been the practice to allot a certain number of shares to provisional committeemen. If Upfill's case, however, be upheld, as it must be in all tribunals except the House of Lords, many persons, hitherto considered exempt, will now be held liable, even in actions at law, upon the ground, that by accepting an allotment of shares, they impliedly authorised their brother committeemen to pledge their credit for the debts of the company.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

Sir,—The Commissioners of Inland Revenue still use the old denoting stamp, "ad valorem duty paid," and have no other die for a denoting stamp. In the new Stamp Act, under the head "Duplicate or Counterpart," there is a proviso, as to any duplicate deed or instrument requiring the 5s. duplicate stamp, that "the duplicate or counterpart shall not be available unless stamped with a particular stamp, for denoting or testifying the payment of the full and proper stamp-duty on the original deed or instrument." It may be advisable to call attention to the very perceptible question, whether a duplicate having a 5s. stamp and the present denoting stamp will be available if the original instrument require a 36s. stamp, (more than the ad valorem duty on the present scale); and perhaps the Commissioners may have a new die for denoting "full and proper duty paid."

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
A SOLICITOR.

A Selection of Leading Cases in Equity, with Notes. Vol. 2. By OWEN DAVIES TUDOR, of the Middle Temple, Esq., Barrister at Law.

[William Maxwell, 1850.]

This is the second and concluding volume of the work, of the first volume of which, by Messrs. White & Tudor, we gave an account in a former number, (13 Jur., part 2, p. 330). It is considerably more bulky than its predecessor, and contains the following leading cases:—

Agar v. Fairfax—Partition.
Aldrich v. Cooper—Marshalling.
Ashburner v. Macquire—Specific legacy—Ademption.
Basset v. Nosworthy—Purchase for valuable consideration without notice.
Blandy v. Widmore—Performance of a covenant to leave a sum of money by allowing a sum to devolve by intestacy.
Brice v. Stokes—Liability of a trustee for the receipts of his co-trustee.
Casborne v. Scarfe—Nature of equity of redemption if an estate in land.
Chancey's case—Satisfaction of a debt by a legacy.
Eyre (Mr. Justice) v. Shaftesbury (Countess of)—Infants—Ward of Court—Guardian and ward.
Harding v. Glyn—Power in the nature of a trust.
Hooley v. Hatton—Repetition of legacies—When legacies are cumulative.
Howard v. Harris—Restrictions on redemption of mortgage discountenanced in equity—Mortgage cannot be made irredeemable.
Howe v. Dartmouth (Earl of)—Conversion of residue bequeathed to persons in succession.
Huguenin v. Baseley—Voluntary settlement obtained by agent—Undue influence.
Huntingdon (Earl of) v. Huntingdon (Countess of)—Mortgage of wife's estate of inheritance for the benefit of her husband—Wife's estate considered only as a surety.

- Le Neve v. Le Neve*—Notice.
Oxford's (Earl of) case—Jurisdiction of equity as to proceedings at law.
Peachy v. Somerset (Duke of)—Penalties and forfeitures, when relieved against in equity.
Penn v. Baltimore (Lord)—Power of Court of equity over property out of its jurisdiction, by a decree in personam.
Pye, Ex parte—Satisfaction of a legacy by a portion—Ademption.
Rees v. Berrington—Release of surety by the creditor giving time to debtor.
Robinson v. Pett—No allowance to an executor or trustee for his care or trouble.
Row v. Dawson—Chose in action assignable in equity.
Ryall v. Rowles—Assignment of debts without notice to debtor invalid against assignees in bankruptcy.
Scott v. Tyler—Conditions in restraint of marriage—Public policy.
Seton v. Slade—Specific performance with compensation.
Silk v. Prime—Equitable assets.
Sloan v. Walter—Penalty, when relieved against.
Stapilton v. Stapilton—Compromise—Family arrangement.
Talbot (Sir John) v. Sharnesbury (Earl of)—Satisfaction of a debt by a legacy.
Thornbrough v. Baker—Executor of mortgagee in fee entitled to money secured on mortgage.
Townley v. Sherborne—Liability for a co-trustee.
Wake v. Congers—Confusion of boundaries.
Warmistrey v. Tunfield (Lady)—Possibility assignable in equity.
Wilcocks v. Wilcocks—Performance of a covenant to purchase and settle an estate.
Woolam v. Hearn—Distinction between seeking and resisting specific performance as to the admission of evidence.

The notes to the cases in this volume possess very much the same merits as distinguished those in the first volume. They display similar learning and ability, and are written with that attention to combine clearness with great condensation, to place the result of a vast number of cases at once concisely and clearly before the practitioner, which is peculiarly required in such a work, and which we noticed as characterising the notes of the former volume.

This volume contains the case of Huguenin v. Baseley, (14 Ves. 273), in which Sir Samuel Romilly made the reply, which is referred to by Lord Brougham, in his Historical Sketches of Statesmen of the Time of George III, in the following words:—"The reply, even as reported in 11 Ves. jun., [14 Ves. 273], in the cause of *Hugonin v. Beasley, where legal matters chiefly were in question, may give no mean idea of his extraordinary powers." We give the concluding passage of it:—

"But though this Court disclaims any such jurisdiction, yet, where a gift is immoderate, bears no proportion to the circumstances of the giver, where no reason appears, or the reason given is falsified, and the giver is a weak man, liable to be imposed upon, this Court will look upon such a gift with a very jealous eye, and very strictly examine the conduct of the persons in whose favour it is made; and if it sees that any arts or stratagems, or any undue means have been used—if it sees the least speck of imposition at the bottom, or that the donor is in such a situation with 'respect to the donee as may naturally give an undue influence over him—if there be the least scintilla of fraud—this Court will and ought to interpose; and by the exertion of such a jurisdiction, they are so far from infringing the right of alienation, which is the inseparable incident of property, that they act upon the principle of securing the full, ample, and unimpeded enjoyment of it.

"The ground, as between guardian and ward, is put upon the danger either of inducing guardians to flatter the passions of their wards, or of the improper exercise of their authority; as the relation of husband and wife is guarded from the effects both of indulgence and severity.

"If this reasoning has any weight, does not the principle apply with infinitely greater force to the present case? What is the authority of a guardian, or even parental authority—what are the means of influence, by severity or indulgence, in such a relation, compared with the power of religious impressions under the ascendancy of a spiritual adviser, with such an engine to work upon the passions; to excite superstitious fears or pious hopes; to inspire, as the object may be best promoted, despair or confidence; to alarm the conscience by the horrors of eternal misery, or support the drooping spirits by unfolding the prospect of eternal happiness: that good or evil which is never to end? What are all other means to these? Are inferior considerations to have so much effect, and is no regard to be given to the most powerful motive that can actuate the human mind? Though no direct authority is produced, your Lordship, dispensing justice by the same rule as your predecessors, upon such a subject, not confined within the narrow limits of precedent, will, as a new relation appears, look into the principles that govern the human heart; and decide, in a case far the strongest that has yet occurred, upon this ground alone, from its infinite importance to the community."

The following is part of Mr. Tudor's note on this case:—

"Huguenin v. Baseley is a leading case on the very salutary jurisdiction of equity to set aside, upon the principle of general public policy, voluntary donations obtained by persons standing in some confidential, fiduciary, or other relation towards the donor, in which dominion may be exercised over him. Sir Samuel Romilly, in his celebrated reply in the principal case, most ably argues, that undue influence, exerted by means of spiritual ascendancy, comes within the principle on which relief had been granted, in the case of a gift from a child or ward to a parent or guardian; but he, and the other counsel, and the Lord Chancellor, were evidently not aware of Norton v. Rolly—a decision of Lord Northington's, since reported in 2 Eden, 286, in which a grant of an annuity obtained by a dissenting minister, having a spiritual ascendancy over a woman under a state of religious delusion, was set aside upon principles of public policy.

"In Huguenin v. Baseley the donation was set aside, it seems, not merely on the ground of the spiritual ascendancy and undue influence obtained by the defendant over the mind of the plaintiff, Mrs. Huguenin, but also on the ground of his having abused the confidence placed in him by her, as an agent managing her affairs.

"The principle upon which Courts of equity set aside such donations has been so accurately stated by Sir Samuel Romilly in his argument, that Lord Cottenham, in the case of Dent v. Bennett, fully adopted it. 'The relief,' observes his Lordship, 'as Sir Samuel Romilly says in his celebrated reply in Huguenin v. Baseley, (from the hearing of which I received so 'much pleasure, that the recollection of it has not been diminished by the lapse of more than thirty years)—the relief stands upon a general principle, applying to all the variety of relations in which dominion may be exercised by one person over another.' (4 My. & C. 277).

* "A case very nearly resembling this, Macabe v. Hussey, was argued in the House of Lords in October, 1831, by Mr. O'Connell, and his argument was a masterpiece, according to the judgment of those who heard it."—Notes by Lord Brougham.

"Before entering further into the consideration of the subject of this note, it may be as well to mention that the case of Villers v. Beaumont, (1 Vern. 100), as is correctly observed in the argument for the defendant in the principal case, clearly establishes the rule, that, in the case of a stranger—that is to say, a person not standing in any confidential or fiduciary relation towards the donor—equity will not set aside a voluntary deed or donation, however improvident it may be, if it be free from the imputation of fraud, surprise, undue influence, and spontaneously executed or made by the donor with his eyes open. And it is equally clear, that in all cases where it has been proved that a mere stranger, connected with the donor by no peculiar or fiduciary relation from which undue influence can be inferred, has, either by fraud, surprise, or undue influence, obtained from him a voluntary donation, a Court of equity will at once set it aside. In such cases, however, the proof of fraud, surprise, or undue influence is completely thrown upon the donor, for, prima facie, the donation is valid. (Hunter v. Atkins, 3 My. & K. 113).

"In the present note, however, it is proposed to consider, first, that class of cases in which actual proof of undue influence may not be required, but will, upon grounds of public policy, be more readily presumed from the peculiar relation subsisting between parties.

"First, as to the relation of parent and child, Courts of equity, although there is no very great evidence of undue influence, will always look with a jealous eye upon donations from a child to a parent, especially where the child has just come of age, and will set them aside if any advantage has been taken by means of the exercise of parental authority. (Cocking v. Pratt, 1 Ves. 401). In Carpenter v. Herriot, (1 Eden, 338), where a father, having advanced a child in his infancy, upon his coming of age took a bond from him to a greater amount than the sums advanced, and which it appears the son was totally unable to pay, Lord Keeper Henley held that the bond was obtained by parental influence, and decreed that it should not stand as a security for the sums advanced, but be set aside altogether. 'If,' said his Lordship, 'a bond be given with advice and deliberation, this Court will not set it aside for the obligor; but if a man gives a voluntary bond for more than he is able to pay, the transaction speaks weakness on the one side, and a sort of imposition on the other.' (See also Blunden v. Barker, 1 P. Wms. 639; Young v. Peachy, 2 Atk. 254, 258; Glissen v. Ogden, cited 2 Atk. 258; Hawes v. Wyatt, 3 Bro. C. C. 156; Heron v. Heron, 2 Atk. 167; S. C., nom. Herne v. Herne, Barnard. 430).

"The same principles are applicable to a person obtaining a voluntary gift, who has put himself in loco parentis towards the donor. Thus, in the case of Archer v. Hudson, (7 Beav. 551), a niece, two months after she came of age, and after her guardians had fully accounted to her, entered into a voluntary security for her uncle, by whom she had been brought up, and who was considered by the Court as standing in loco parentis. Lord Langdale, M. R., set aside the security. 'Nobody,' observed his Lordship, 'has ever asserted that there cannot be a pecuniary transaction between a parent and child, the child being of age; but everybody will affirm in this court, that, if there be a pecuniary transaction between parent and child just after the child attains the age of twenty-one years, and prior to what may be called a complete emancipation, without any benefit moving to the child, the presumption is, that an undue influence has been exercised to procure that liability on the part of the child; and that it is the business and the duty of the party who endeavours to maintain such a transaction to shew that that presumption is adequately rebutted; and that it may be adequately rebutted is perfectly clear. This Court does not interfere to prevent an act even of bounty between parent and child, but it will take care (under the circumstances in which the parent and child are placed before the emancipation of the child) that such child is placed in such a position as will enable him to form an entirely free and unfettered judgment, independent altogether of any sort of control.' And see Revett v. Harvey, (1 Sim. & S. 502). But if the transaction is reasonable, and entered into with good faith, equity will not interfere, as in Blackborn v. Edgley, (1 P. Wms. 600, 606), where a son in plentiful circumstances gave his father a bond to pay him an annuity of 120*l.* for his life. Lord Macclesfield held, that, as it appeared to have been the free act of the son, and what he thought himself obliged in honour to do, and there being no proof to impeach it, it ought not to be set aside in equity. So, it seems, if a father prevail upon a son, tenant in tail under a settlement, to take an estate for life only, with remainder to his first and every other son, the transaction will not be set aside upon the suggestion of the father's having an undue influence over him. (Tendril v. Smith, 2 Atk. 86)."

The comparative merits of law and equity have of late engaged considerable attention and discussion. Without entering here into the other merits of that important question, we may remark, that while the Courts of equity have exhibited few examples which, like that quoted above from the argument of Sir Samuel Romilly in Huguenin v. Baseley, have approached in eloquence the forensic achievements of Erskine and a few others in the courts of law, on the other hand the Courts of law have produced few, if any, judicial displays of combined depth of learning and power of ratiocination which can be compared with some of the great judgments of Lords Hardwicke and Cottenham, Sir William Grant, and Sir Thomas Plumer. And we may also remark, that, with the exception of Lord Hardwicke, (the greatest, indeed, of them all), who, like one of the ablest of the present equity judges, was educated on both sides of Westminster Hall, all these great equity judges have been formed in the courts of equity, and not in the courts of law. It is observable also, that almost all Lord Hardwicke's great judgments were delivered when he presided in the court of equity. To attempt to trace completely the causes of these phenomena would far exceed our present object and limits; but we are inclined to think that one conclusion, at least, that may be drawn fairly from them is this—that whatever changes may be contemplated in our present English system of jurisprudence, such a change as would tend to swallow up equity, and leave only law, as it at present exists and operates in England, would be very far from attaining the end of doing complete justice in the more complicated questions of property that arise in the present state of English society. Whatever superiority the law practitioners and the law judges may possess over the equity practitioners and the equity judges in the dispatch of certain kinds of business, there can hardly exist a doubt, that questions of property, involving a vast variety of nice and complicated points, and requiring for their solution a proportionate amount of profound legal learning, and of long and unwearied mental labour and acuteness, could not be solved at all with any degree of accuracy and completeness, and consequently with any approach to the fulfilment of the ends of justice, without the practised skill and the long trained habits of careful and laborious investigation which are the result of the elaborate special education of the equity practitioners and the equity judges. But whatever amendment, by assimilation or otherwise, our legal and equitable systems, or either of them, may be capable of, it cannot be doubted, that, in the present state of the practice of the English law, the appointment of a common-law practitioner to preside in the English courts of equity is not likely either to promote the interests of the suitors or to advance the law as a science.

LONDON, DECEMBER 14, 1850.

A CASE has been very recently decided by Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, (Ollendorf v. Black, Dec. 9, 1850*), which, at first sight, would appear to contradict some of the cases decided by Lord Cottenham upon the rule to be followed in granting or withholding injunctions; but, upon closer examination, we apprehend it will be found that the Vice-Chancellor's decision is quite consistent with those cases.

The bill in Ollendorf v. Black was by a foreigner, claiming copyright in a work composed by himself; and on a motion for an injunction to restrain infringement by the defendant, the short point was, whether the plaintiff could, as an alien, sustain his title under the Copyright Act. The only difference between this case and Boosey v. Purday, (13 Jur., part 1, p. 918), which has recently decided, overruling previous cases, that an alien cannot sustain copyright in this country, was, that in Boosey v. Purday, the alien, having composed his work abroad, transmitted it to his assignee here, who first published it here. In Ollendorf v. Black the alien was himself in England when the work was published; and on that circumstance the Vice-Chancellor relied, apparently to some extent, as distinguishing the case before him from Boosey v. Purday, without at all deciding that the plaintiff's temporary residence in England had given him an English domicile. The Vice-Chancellor has, therefore, expressly abstained from overruling, though he avowedly in his judgment disapproved, the decision in Boosey v. Purday.

* This case will be reported in THE JURIST at the earliest possible opportunity.

VOL. XIV.

W W

The point, however, on which the judgment of the Vice-Chancellor may, at first sight, appear to be inconsistent with the doctrines established by Lord Cottenham is, that admitting that there was a conflict of authority at law as to the right of an alien to copyright, his Honor nevertheless granted the injunction; whereas the doctrine usually supposed by the Profession to be laid down by Lord Cottenham is, that if a material doubt be thrown on the legal title of the plaintiff, equity will not interfere by injunction till the legal title has been established.

That, in practice, Lord Cottenham carried this doctrine so far as almost invariably to refuse an injunction, if even a moderate degree of doubt were thrown upon the plaintiff's title, is not to be denied; and it is very possible, we might venture to say probable, that his Lordship would have refused an injunction in a case of as much doubt as the case of Ollendorf v. Black. But his Lordship, in laying down the rule, always fully recognised the authority of the Court to use a judicial discretion; he did not, any more than Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, admit that the mere fact of the title being doubtful, would entitle a defendant to say no injunction could be granted. His language in the leading case of Bacon v. Jones (4 My. & C. 433) was this—"When an application is for an interlocutory injunction, several courses are open; the Court may at once grant the injunction simpliciter, without more—a course which, though perfectly competent to the Court, is not very likely to be taken when the defendant raises a question as to the validity of the plaintiff's title; or it may follow the more usual, and, as I apprehend, the more wholesome practice, in such a case, of either granting an injunction, and at the same time directing the plaintiff to proceed to establish his legal title, or of requiring him first to establish his title at law, and suspending the grant of the injunction until the result of the legal investigation has been ascertained, the defendant in the meantime keeping an account: which of these courses ought to be taken must depend entirely upon the discretion of the Court, according to the case made."

Entirely consistent with this is the language of the Vice-Chancellor in Ollendorf v. Black. "It has been said here," said his Honor, "that the legal right is doubtful—that the mere existence of the doubt is sufficient to prevent the Court from granting an injunction. In that I do not agree. I believe that doctrine to be new in this court; for it would interfere, theoretically and practically, with its jurisdiction, daily exercised to a very great extent. The question of the legal right being in doubt is a matter for the serious attention of the Court, and one to which it is right that weight should be given; but it is not a matter which renders it incumbent on the Court to refuse the injunction. The Court must be guided by a discretion exercised according to the exigencies and the nature of each particular case."

About the rule, then, there is no conflict of authority. In its application there is, and necessarily must be, from the different constitution of men's minds, considerable uncertainty; since that which appears to the mind of one judge to be a serious doubt cast on the title of a plaintiff, may appear to the mind of another to be a doubt of much less importance. As, again, the mischief likely to arise by erroneously supporting for a time a title, which may ultimately fail at law, may strike the mind of one judge as much greater, or more fatal, than the mischief which would arise from leaving temporarily unprotected a good legal title. There can be no doubt in the minds of those who have observed Lord Cottenham's practice on motions for injunctions, particularly in regard to patents and copyright, that his Lordship had a very strong tendency to treat, as disentiuling a plaintiff to interfere with the defendant's enjoyment pending the trial of the legal right, such a degree of doubt of the validity of that legal title, as appeared to many, perhaps to most, other men a very slight amount of doubt. Hence it was, probably, that between the late Vice-Chancellor of England and the late Lord Chancellor there was so frequent a conflict of opinion on the granting of injunctions.

It is to be lamented that the rule of the Court should be (perhaps necessarily) so far dependent upon the particular mode in which different men estimate quantities, as to be in effect rather uncertain. But that no new rule is introduced by Ollendorf v. Black we take to be clear; and the question will continue to be, as it always has been upon motions of the kind made in that case, not whether there is a mere scintilla of doubt of the plaintiff's legal title—not whether there is a great and manifest doubt, but whether, looking at the extent of doubt cast on the title, and looking to see which way will be the balance of wrong inflicted, if the Court shall have mistaken the legal rights of the parties, the judicial discretion of the Court may be expected to be so exerted as to protect for a time a legal right which may turn out to be unfounded, or to stop the exercise of a right which may turn out to have a legal foundation.

POINTS ON THE CONSTRUCTION OF WILLS.

One great principle to be observed in construing wills is to effectuate, if possible, what seems to be the general intention; but this must be understood with a proviso that such intention is expressed or necessarily implied. The error to which the rule is likely to lead without such a limitation is an endeavour to dispose of the property of a testator for him as he would probably have wished it to go under particular circumstances, although the expressions in his will do not distinctly authorise such disposition.

In other words, the danger is, that a judge may be tempted to add to or contradict the language of a will to suit an event for which it has not expressly provided.

A very few considerations are sufficient to shew the gravity of such an error.

In the first place, the business of the Courts would be endless if they were to undertake to supply words to meet every omitted case in wills and testaments, for there is scarcely a devise or bequest which is precisely applicable to the state of things at the death of the testator, both in respect to its subjects and objects; and no executor or trustee of a will could venture to exercise for himself this discretion, of enlarging the expressions to meet the particular case, nor would a devise or legatee be satisfied, or indeed safe, in trusting to any other than a judicial construction; so that the Courts would probably have to undertake the administration of all wills and testaments.

Then, again, a strong objection to such jurisdiction would be its uncertainty, and the waste of time and money it must occasion.

If the tribunal were infallible, and an appeal to it might be made without delay or expense, perhaps abstract equity might require this relief to be granted. A person excluded by the literal reading of a will might then be heard to say, "The evident intention of the testator was to benefit his kindred in my degree; and if he had foreseen the circumstances under which his will has to be administered, there is no doubt that he would have left his property to me, and therefore it is just that the Court should supply the omission."

But it can be no reproach to any human tribunal to speak of its fallibility in applying such a principle in the construction of wills as this to which we object, for the uncertainty to which it leads is enormous. How careless would testators become as to the disposition of their property if it was known that the most carefully drawn will would be but an intimation of general intention, which a Court would modify to meet the circumstances to which it must be applied at the death of its author. Thus the uncertainty would be increased. But it would be quite embarrassing enough without any increase. Every one conversant with wills must be aware how difficult it sometimes is to feel at all sure what the testator's intention would have been if he had contemplated the circumstances under which his will has to be administered, or whether, in fact, he did foresee those circumstances or not. In short, not to multiply objections, the inquiry as to the general intention, not controlled by what is actually expressed, leads to such a maze of uncertainty, for testators themselves, for the courts in which wills have to be construed, and also for those who are to administer wills and those to take benefits under them, that no will could be construed on such a principle without the direction of the Courts; and even their direction would often be of very questionable equity, while the necessity of always applying for it would cause great expense and delay.

These considerations shew the absolute necessity, that respect to the testator's general intention must be limited, so as never, at least, to interfere with what he has expressed, even though it may be evident that the expression does not provide, as he intended, for the actual circumstances to which it must be applied.

Illustrations of this rule will occur at once to every learned reader. One example of its application is in the endeavour to determine the time at which a class who are to take an ultimate benefit under a will should be ascertained. It often happens that the time is not expressly fixed; and if the class be ascertained at one period, it will include an individual whom it was not the intention to benefit by the gift; while, by ascertaining the class at another period, such individual would be excluded.

For example, suppose the gift to be of a life interest in a certain subject to A., and from and after his decease the whole subject to the testator's next of kin, or to his right heirs, and that at the testator's death A. is such next of kin or heir. Now, from the gift to him of a particular interest, it seems that the testator intended that A. should not have the subject absolutely. That is the general intention. But the expression in the will gives him both the particular interest and the absolute property in the subject. Is a court of justice at liberty, in construing such a will, to escape the difficulty, by saying that the class shall be ascertained at the death of A., and thus to exclude him? Clearly not, if the rule be limited as above stated; for to defer the time of ascertaining the class, with the object of effecting the testator's general intention, would be to make a will for him, to some extent. In the supposed case, the next of kin or heirs of the testator are his next of kin or heirs at the time of his death—that is the meaning of such a description without more; and to make those words signify next of kin or heirs at some future time, when the class is diminished or altered, is to add to the testator's will a direction which he did not express, whatever he might have intended.

It may seem strange to some, but it is true, that the highest authorities among the judges in Chancery have differed on this subject, and that the decisions in this very case are not to be reconciled. They are too numerous to be collected within the space of a paper like the present, but a reference to some of them may be interesting.

Sir John Leach, in such a case, thought it just to give effect to the testator's general intention by deferring the time of ascertaining the class. In Briden v. Hewlett (2 My. & K. 90) and Butler v. Bushnell (3 My. & K. 232) he considered words of futurity in the description of the class to be a sufficient expression of the intention to postpone the time of ascertaining it to the death of the tenant for life, though it might be objected even there that the expression "such persons as shall happen to be" my next of kin, which were the words used, may refer as well to the time of the testator's death as to any more distant period, that time being future to him when he made his will. But in Pearce v. Vincent (2 Kee. 230; 2 My. & K. 800) even such words of futurity were wanting; and though the intention was, perhaps, to exclude the tenant for life, it certainly was not expressed. The case was, in effect, a devise and bequest of real and personal property to T. Pearce for life, and after his decease upon trust for such of the testator's relations of the name of Pearce, being a male, as T. Pearce should appoint; in default, for such of the testator's relations of the name of Pearce, being a male, as the said T. Pearce should adopt, if he should be living at the decease of the said T. Pearce; in default of such adoption, or of such male relation living at the decease of T. Pearce, then "for the next or nearest relation, or nearest of kin of him, the testator, of the name of Pearce, being a male, or the elder of such male relations, in case there should be more than one of equal degree, who should be living at his, the testator's, decease," absolutely. T. Pearce did not exercise his powers, and was the nearest male relation of the testator living at his death, and as such entitled to the absolute interest in the property under the express words of the will. But Sir John Leach, considering that the testator's evident intention was to exclude T. Pearce, intimated his strong desire to carry out that intention; and one case being decided against his opinion in the Court of Exchequer, he sent another to the Common Pleas; this last, however, was decided in the same way, and then the cause came on before Lord Langdale, who disagreed with Sir J. Leach on the matter, and stated, in conformity with the above rule, that "the argument derived from intention did not apply," there being a clear gift under which T. Pearce was entitled.

This case is here quoted thus at length because it raised the precise question whether the testator's evident intention was to be allowed to overrule a clear expression in his will which defeated that intention in its application to the circumstances, and it shewed how great authorities differed on this question.

Passing by many important and well-considered decisions on the same point, we refer the learned reader to Seiffert v. Badham, (9 Beav. 370); Lasbury v. Newport, (Id. 376); and Uryhart v. Uryhart, (13 Sim. 629), recent cases in which the rule of construction we contend for has been observed; and we beg to direct particular attention to a case very lately reported, in which the rule was plainly stated and followed by a great master of equity.

In that case (Bird v. Luckie, 14 Jur., part 1, p. 1015) a life interest in certain property was given to W.; and if he should die without issue, then the corpus of the property was given in trust for the testator's next of kin; and at the testator's death W. was his sole next of kin.

Knight Bruce, V. C., said, supposing the will to be read without reference to extrinsic facts, the next of kin meant were the next of kin at the testator's death; then the question was, whether these facts made any difference. He quoted Lord Hardwicke's words in Lemon v. Holnden, (1 Ves. 294), "Whatever the intention is, if there are not words in the will to warrant it, either express or implied, it cannot have effect;" and his Honor decided in favour of W., because, whatever might have been the intention of the testator, "we are only allowed to hear him through his will and codicil."

The Vice-Chancellor, in the course of his judgment, observed, that the decisions on this point are irreconcilable with one another, and with admirable candour spoke in terms of disapprobation of his own in the cases of Booth v. Vickars (1 Coll. 6) and Godkin v. Murphy, (2 Y. & C. C. 357).

The Profession cannot be too often reminded of the words of Blackstone, J., which Lord Campbell has mentioned in terms of well-merited praise, (2 Lord Chief Justices, 433)—"If Courts either of law or equity, (in both of which the rules of interpretation must always be the same)—if these, or either of them, should indulge an unlimited latitude of forming conjectures upon wills, instead of attending to their grammatical or legal construction, the consequence must be endless litigation. Every title that belongs to a will must be brought into Westminster Hall; for if once we depart from the established rule of interpretation, without a moral certainty that the meaning of the testator requires it, no interpretation can be safe till it has had the sanction of a court of justice. The law of real property in this country is now formed into a fine artificial system, full of unseen corrections and nice dependencies, and he that breaks one link of the chain endangers the dissolution of the whole. Will it be said, that, when the testator's intent is manifest, the law will supply the proper means to carry it into execution, though he may have used improper ones? This would be turning every devise into an executory trust, and would be arming every court of law with more than the jurisdiction of a court of equity—a power to frame a conveyance for the testator, instead of construing that which he has already framed."

In conclusion, we may observe, that it is the objection to all fixed rules that they produce hardship and even injustice in particular cases; but the choice often is, as here, between that hardship and the total abolition of the rule itself. In fact, the objection, if allowed to prevail, would abolish all laws, and substitute abstract principles of justice, which no human reason could be trusted to apply. That seems to be the wisest rule, which, based upon the immutable principles of right, is so accommodated to our imperfect condition, as to be not only in the main equitable, but practical in its application, and certain.

A SUMMARY OF THE LAW OF MODERN PLEADING, incident to the Rules of Hilary Term, 1834; with such of the Decisions on Practice, Evidence, and Costs, as are closely connected with that subject. Also, copious Analysis of the Cases and Pleadings. By ROBERTS PHILIP TYRWHITT, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

"The Reports of the 'Common-law Commissioners' suggested extensive changes in the practice on this important subject, (Pleading), which changes, whether improvements or not, were sanctioned by Parliament, and embodied by all the common-law courts in general rules, dated Hilary Term, 1834. It was then sought to adapt old principles to modern exigencies, and to link the present with the past by regulating the transition—with what success, the work before us attempts to develop. It embodies in its text the pith of the decisions on 'Modern Pleading,' as incident to the above 'rules,' and condenses in the notes other valuable matter at present spread over lengthy 'reports.' The latter feature is adapted to render the volume more extensively useful in courts of Nisi Prius, particularly on the circuits, and in the library of country practitioners. Nor is it rigorously limited to its chief object, but includes the course of decisions on the replication de injuria in its extended application, as well as on the modern acts respecting land, tithes, mines, commons, ways, and easements, together with so much of the law of amendment, evidence, and costs as elucidates the new rules of pleading. On the whole, this work appears to have been prepared with much care and industry, and will be found to afford in small comparative compass a useful adjunct to the works of Stephen and Chitty."—Times, Oct. 29th, 1846.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"There is something eminently practical in the general aspect of the book; it is small, compact of print and law, and clearly arranged and set forth."—The Jurist.

"No turf-man, betting-man, horse-dealer, stable-keeper, or in fact any other description of horseman, will be able to get on in his business without this book."—The Veterinarian.

"This is a most useful book, edited by Mr. G. H. H. Oliphant, a Barrister, and embraces every matter in which the Horse is concerned. Every question is treated of with clearness and accuracy, and the law as it exists is explained and demonstrated by recent decisions in the Courts of Law. The question respecting Derby Clubs and their legality forms a prominent portion of the work, and we unfeignedly recommend its possession to all interested in the numerous subjects on which it treats."—Bell's Life.

LONDON, DECEMBER 21, 1850.

As a commission has now issued for the purpose of inquiring generally what may be done for the reform of the Court of Chancery, and as among the commissioners are named gentlemen not only of known goodwill towards the cause of reform, but of long practice and tried ability, we may anticipate some very extensive, substantial, and well-considered changes in the machinery and procedure of the Courts of equity, perhaps in matters touching even their organic structure.

Whether any material change in the latter would be for the advantage of the country, is a very difficult question; but as to the machinery and procedure of the Court, there is no difficulty in pointing out grievous defects, and not much more in suggesting the principles of remedies; the difficulty lies in framing the details of a good practical code. Let us just take a very short review of the present state of Chancery procedure. We have now subsisting four distinct courses of proceeding: first, the old system of bills and answers, with all the well known and settled practice depending on that mode of procedure; secondly, the new system, or rather unsystem, of claims, with all the unsettled practice yet to be gathered from, or rather invented for, the Orders of 1850; thirdly, we have the new system, under Mr. Turner's Act, of special cases; fourthly, we have the new system, for a system it is in itself, under the Winding-up Acts; so that we now are almost as varied in our forms of suit as are the common lawyers in the forms of their actions. This multifariousness of procedure is of itself a great, and we conceive a totally unnecessary, evil. No doubt it will be said, bills are good for one class of cases, claims are good for another, special cases for a third, and so on; and, to a certain extent, that is true—that is to say, bills with charges and interrogatories, and formal answers answering every allegation, although idle as applied to uncontested cases, are very good for complex ones; and claims, as they appear to be regulated under the Orders of 1850, although probably as idle, if applied to complicated and contested cases, are very good for mere administration suits uncontested. But that which is required by the different kinds of business, is not absolutely different forms of suit, but difference in the details of one course of procedure and practice. A bill is, in itself, a very good form of procedure; it is not its form that has been its vice, but the habitual application to all cases of all the parts of its most elaborate form, without regard to the nature of the suit commenced by it.

VOL. XIV.

If a bill stated plainly the plaintiff's case, that is, the heads of his case, but not its details, without setting out documents, and only referring to them; if, in fact, it was drawn as we now draw a special claim, (which is really nothing more nor less than a carefully condensed bill without interrogatories), there never would be any occasion for a claim. But then with a bill is always associated the notion of interrogatories, and of an answer, and a minute answer; and herein was the practical vice of the bill and answer procedure. A bill ought not to require, and does not of its nature require, an answer, using the word as it is commonly understood—that is, it does not of its very nature require discovery from the defendant. It may be requisite to have that, and when it is, specific statements, and interrogatories founded on them, may properly be introduced into a bill. But though a bill does not necessarily require discovery, it requires, like any other mode of commencing a litigation, a statement of some sort, of the defence; and in the omission of this was at least one grave defect of the Orders of 1850.

In our view of that part of Chancery reform which relates to its forms of pleading, the best proceeding would be wholly to repeal and annihilate the Orders of 1850, and to restore bills, not in their old luxuriant verbosity, but placing them under regulations, in which the main points to be attended to appear to us to be these:—First, bills should in general state only the heads of the plaintiff's demand, not its detailed circumstances; in fact, not as they now do by custom, his evidence. They should not be accompanied by interrogatories, except where special discovery of matter not capable of proof is required; they should not contain imaginary charges and suggestions of pretences, at the peril of costs; they should be the plain statement, in as plain language as the circumstances of the case will permit, of the facts and documents on which the plaintiff founds his claim. Governed and regulated by such restrictions, and accompanied when requisite by interrogatories, bills would be what they now are, the very best mode of wringing a defendant's conscience where that is requisite; and where it is not, they would be as harmless, as short, and as wholesome a mode of instituting a suit as any other.

Next as to the pleading in defence. Here again there is nothing inherently bad in the answer. What was bad in it was the practice of the defendant being always called upon to purge his conscience in a very wordy manner, whether he had anything to conceal or not. The remedy is in altering the details, not in altering the thing itself. If, then, to a bill making a mere statement, and not interrogating, the defendant, not demurring, were required to put in an answer, by which he should be at liberty to deny any statement of the bill, and to add any substantive counter-statement of his own, but by which he should be taken to admit everything that he neither denied nor rebutted; and if he were required to answer minutely only when specially interrogated, we should have all the benefit of a known system of defence, without the practical defects that have grown up and surrounded it.

The bill and answer restored in a reformed state, the consequential modes of procedure follow; but as they nearly all require improvement in detail, we will proceed to point out what we conceive to be their practical defects. First, as to defence by way of demurrer. This is beyond all question a very reasonable and useful mode of defence under circumstances; but it is very questionable whether it ought to be permitted, except when it goes to the very substance of the case, because the use of a demurrer is, for the purpose of saving expense, to stop the suit at once, if on his own shewing the plaintiff has no title to relief; not, at the expense of a hearing in court, to cure some purely technical irregularity in the form of the suit, which the defendant admits in general to be really immaterial, by his being perfectly willing to go on, if the defect is cured by amendment. In all cases of demurrer on mere form, a simple notice to the plaintiff to cure the defect, or to omit doing so at his peril, would answer the purpose of a formal demurrer. Except demurrer and answer, we should be disposed to object, as the Americans have done in their new system of procedure, to any form of defence. A plea is, after all, but a portion of an answer, and if bills and answers were framed on the principle above suggested, would be so seldom of any practical advantage, that it would be better to exclude it altogether from the system of equity pleading.

The most material alteration which we should venture to suggest, as deserving of consideration, would be that relating to the mode of taking evidence. The present mode is confessedly insufficient to elicit truth—the remedy appears really simple enough. All evidence in Chancery, as well as at law, should be given under vivâ voce examination. This might not be always convenient in court. But the office of examiner should be very superior to what it now is. The evidence should be taken vivâ voce before examiners, who should be experienced Barristers, and whose courts should be open to the public; and the written evidence could be brought before the Court, as the written depositions now are, power being reserved to the Court, on the application of any party, or of its own motion, to have any witness examined in open court.

Our space will not allow this subject to be now further discussed. We shall resume it at a future period.

Practical Remarks upon the injurious Operation of the Wills Act in Respect to the Execution of Wills; with Suggestions for its Amendment. By an Advocate in Doctors' Commons. [William Benning & Co., 1850.]

In England, every law being considered as promulgated as soon as it is enacted, the general presumption is, that no one is ignorant of the law. But with reference to the doctrine of some very important recent decisions on the Wills Act, the learned author of the pamphlet named above observes:—

"Such is now the law; but was this law published 'in 1837, in the requirement that a will shall be signed at the foot or end? Nay, is one person in ten thousand now acquainted with this law, upon which 'their power of bequeathing and their title to property bequeathed depend?'

"It is impossible to say that this universal ignorance is the fault of the people. The Court itself has been 'twelve years arriving at this principle, which is even 'now promulgated only by the Reports of Mr. Thornton, (7 Notes of Cases, part 15), and scarcely known 'beyond the precincts of Doctors' Commons, except, 'indeed, by the legatees who have suffered by its enforcement.'" (Pp. 29, 30).

It becomes, therefore, of some importance that the result of these recent decisions should, at least, be generally known.

The writer mentions, (p. 63), as remarkable instances of persons unacquainted with the law, (which form a striking commentary on the legal presumption that no one is ignorant of the law), "persons of superior education, persons even educated in the profession of the law"—the son of the late Vice-Chancellor of England; 'the sister of another learned judge, who is almost daily 'administering this very law in the Judicial Committee 'of the Privy Council; and lastly, within these few 'months, the late Queen Dowager herself."

* One of these cases, given in the Appendix, (Re John Hill, 7 Notes of Cases, part 8, p. 266), reminds us of another lawyer, of the name of Hill, (Serjeant Hill), whom Lord Eldon said he knew to be the greatest lawyer of his time, and whose will, we believe, nobody could understand. That, however, could hardly be attributed to the most learned Serjeant's ignorance of the law.

The Wills Act says that a will, in order to be valid, "shall be signed at the foot or end thereof by the testator." The writer of this pamphlet shews that the Reports of Cases in the Court of Probate, as published by Dr. Curteis, Dr. Robertson, and Mr. Thornton, the editor of the Notes of Cases in the Ecclesiastical and Maritime Courts, contain, in a period of twelve legal years, above sixty cases where the validity of wills depended upon this question; that they contain only eleven cases of wills declared invalid from non-signature "at the foot or end," during the first ten years after the law came into operation; but that, from November, 1849, to April, 1850, a period of less than six months, they contain no less than sixteen cases of invalidity on the same ground.

It appears that we have no case of a will declared invalid, on the ground of the signature not being immediately after the conclusion of the will, until the 10th March, 1846, more than eight years after the law came into operation; but that during the first three terms of the past legal year we find no less than sixteen. "In eight years there is no case—in six months there are sixteen." The writer gives the following account of the change introduced in regard to the principle of these decisions:—

"We now come to the first case (for Chaplyn's comes more properly under 'Signature in Attestation Clause,' 4 Notes of Cases, 490) of refusal of probate under this error of signature—Scarlett's, (10th March, 1846). This seems to have been not only the commencement, but the reason, of the numerous subsequent rejections; for it appears from the affidavits of the witnesses (Scarlett's case affords strong evidence of the extensive ignorance of the law, for there were at least four persons present at the execution of the will) that the deceased objected to sign his name, as suggested, a little below the line ending with the word "executors," on the first side of the paper, and proposed to sign on the lower part of the second side, alleging as a reason, that any addition he might think proper to make to his will, after execution, might be inserted in the blank or space between the word "executors" and his signature." Upon which the Court remarks—"He signs the will at first provisionally, for it is clear that he had an intention to make an addition to it. I am clearly of opinion that there has not been a due execution. It was not signed at the foot or end of the will; the deceased always contemplated making the addition he made to it."

"The next reported case is Ayres v. Ayres, (7th May, 1847—1 Robert. 487; 5 Notes of Cases, 375), where the Court, in rejecting the allegation, remarked, "Though the Court has in some instances decreed probate of papers, on motion, signed in places where one would not have expected to find signatures, yet in all the cases there was a disposition of the entire property, which is not the case in the present instance. . . . I have reason to know that it is the opinion of the superior Court that this Court has gone to the full length in giving effect to the intentions of parties. I am not, therefore, inclined to go further in the construction of the act."

"Hence we find, that at this period the disposition or non-disposition of the entire property regulated the interpretation of the words 'foot or end'; and that, therefore, the intention of the deceased, with respect to the place of his signature, was taken into consideration; and we also find, that Sir Herbert Jenner Fust's gradual abandonment of the equitable for the literal interpretation of the act is to be attributed to hints and suggestions from the superior Court of Probate; and inasmuch as we do not yet find that it has been hinted to the learned judge that he is now interpreting the same too strictly and too literally, we must conclude, that the numerous rejections of wills under this literal interpretation have the approval of the superior Court, and are considered by it as the legitimate consequences of the correct construction of the law.

"If so, there is no remedy against the grievous injustice of law but an appeal to the Legislature for its alteration or modification." (P. 18).

The leading case on this point of the law is the case of Smee v. Bryer, (1 Rob. 616), wherein an appeal was made to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, (composed of Lord Brougham, Lord Langdale, M. R., Dr. Lushington, and Mr. Pemberton Leigh), which affirmed the decision of the inferior Court, and thereby expressed its approval of the strict and literal interpretation of the law with respect to signature "at the foot or end." The reasons assigned by the Judicial Committee for affirming the judgment of Sir Herbert Jenner Fust are thus given in the pamphlet from the Notes of Cases, (6 Notes of Cases, Suppl. xii):—

"Per Curiam.—In this case, the will of the testatrix, Mary Bateman, is written on three sides of a sheet of foolscap paper. At the foot or end of the third and last side of the will there is space sufficient to have received the signature of the testatrix, and also the signatures of two witnesses, if not accompanied by an attestation clause formally expressed. But neither the testatrix nor the witnesses signed on the third side of the will immediately at the foot or end thereof; her signature is found about half way down the fourth side of the sheet of paper, no part of the will being immediately above it; and with the signature, about the middle of the fourth side, is an attestation clause formally expressed, and signed by two witnesses. The vacancy above the signature on the fourth side is occupied only by two signatures of witnesses, attesting an interlineation made between the fifth and sixth lines of that part of the will which is written on the first side of the same sheet of paper.

"The question is, whether this will is signed by the testatrix at the foot or end of the will, according to the true intent and meaning of the statute?"

"Now, forms are required for the purpose of preventing spurious wills. It may happen, even frequently, that genuine wills, i. e. wills truly expressing the intentions of the testators, are made without observation of the required forms, and whenever that happens, the genuine intention is frustrated by the act of the Legislature, of which the general object is to give effect to the intention.

"The Courts must consider that the Legislature, having regard to all probable circumstances, has thought it best, and has therefore determined to run the risk of frustrating the intention sometimes in preference to the risk of giving effect to, or facilitating the formation of, spurious wills, by the absence of forms. It is supposed, and that authoritatively, that the evil of defeating the intention in some cases, by requiring forms, is less than the evil probable to arise by giving validity to wills made without any form in all cases.

"When questions arise whether the prescribed forms have been observed or not—and such cases must frequently occur—it seems to be the duty of the Courts to construe the enactment according to the plain rules of common sense; not to strain the simple meaning of the words, or to be astute in giving special constructions on particular occasions for the purpose of evading the application of the rule, where its application may seem to us to frustrate or defeat the intention of testators in particular cases. We must act according to the rule, as expressed by the Legislature, founded on the principle, that it is more important to maintain the integrity of the general rule than to give effect to a particular will at the risk of acting contrary to the intention of the Legislature, and depriving the public of that benefit which was intended to be produced by the generality of the rule.

"And, applying these principles to the present case, it appears to us, and we shall so report to her Majesty, that the name of the testatrix, Mary Bateman, is not signed at the foot or end of the will, as required by the act, and therefore that the will is not valid." (P. 23).

The writer discusses at some length the point of the requirement of the signature of the testator immediately after the conclusion of the will. He contends, that if a testator be not acquainted with this indispensable condition of validity, it is manifest that it can have no effect upon his mind; but if he be aware that a blank space at the end of his will would invalidate the whole, it is equally manifest that he would not leave a blank space in that forbidden part, but would leave it where it would answer exactly the same purpose, without invalidating the will, viz. in the middle or the beginning. But some of his arguments on this point do not appear to us conclusive. He says, (p. 32), "The blank space is of itself, pro tanto, incontrovertible proof that nothing has been added—that the assent has not been extended in fraud of the Legislature, either by the testator or others." How is it incontrovertible proof? For how can it be known how much of the will was written before the signature? When any writing has a signature close to the end of it, the inference is, that the party signing intended such writing as a certain act of his, complete in itself; if he affixes his signature at some distance from the end, the inference is, that he intended to add something to render it complete. And in regard to the writer's remark a little further on in the same page, that "a blank space at the conclusion is no stronger evidence of an intention to add than a blank space in the middle of a will, which the Court has declared to be permitted by the statute," it may be observed, that a blank space anywhere else than at the end is of a different character from one at the end. It generally has, or may have, reference to some special matter or point on which the testator either has not made up his mind, or has not obtained the exact information he requires. Whereas a blank space at the end affords, pro tanto, a general inference of incompleteness of such a nature that the matter to be added may alter fundamentally the nature, at least the effect, of the instrument. At the same time, it cannot be denied that a blank space in any part of a will may open as large a door to fraud as a blank space at the end. But there are two questions to be kept in view—that of fraud, and that of the testator's intention or will; and in regard to the second, it appears to us that a blank space at the end affords more evidence that a written instrument in which it occurs is not a full and complete manifestation of the testator's last will than a blank space in any other part of it.

After discussing the first branch of the law of execution, viz. the signature of the testator, the writer proceeds (p. 35) to discuss the second branch, viz. the evidence of that execution as dependent upon the testimony of others. Here he contends, that as the proof "that the signature at the foot or end was made in the presence of two witnesses present at the same time, and that those two witnesses attested and subscribed the will in the presence of the testator," depends entirely upon the testimony of the two witnesses, as the law now stands, almost every will that is made may become a nullity by the slight perjury of two persons, or even one, under certain circumstances. He comments (p. 42) on the exclusion of autograph wills, concluding that "an autograph will is the most perfect and authentic evidence of a testator's intentions," and that the proof that a will was wholly written by a man is stronger evidence of his intentions than the proof that he wrote his signature thereto. "Yet this proof," he says, "the law utterly excludes. As the law now stands, two or twenty witnesses might be able to testify that they saw the testator calmly and deliberately write his will, or acknowledge a certain document to be his will; yet their testimony would be utterly useless, unless two at least could bear witness that he attached or acknowledged his signature thereto in their presence, and that they both, in his presence, also signed their own names after such acknowledgment." (P. 42). And he suggests, as at least a partial remedy—"Relax the restriction as to signature, or acknowledgment of signature, in the presence of two witnesses, and allow the actual or virtual acknowledgment of the document itself by the testator." (P. 43).

In conclusion, he makes the following suggestion, (p. 87):—

"If it were enacted that such wills as are now invalid through the omission of some requisite of the law might receive special probate upon satisfactory proof being given to the Court that the testator intended the document as his last will and testament, but appeared to have misapprehended some requirement of the law, justice would be done to legatees, further protection given to testators, and the inducements to perjury removed, without, I think, the example introducing a general mischief."

"It would not repeal the law. Its requirements would be the same, but every instance of non-compliance would be brought under the consideration of the Court, and unless satisfactorily accounted for, and shewn by fair evidence not to defeat the intention of the law, its penalties would still fall upon the document and its legatees. It would again put the balance in the hands of justice without fear of her being fastidious by the 'litigation of imperfect papers,' or being surprised or deceived by the 'fraudulent fabrication of spurious ones.'"

"The special probate should have a stamp of the same value as that required under intestacy, so that this and the extra expense of a motion in court would be a fine upon the property for the negligence or ignorance of the owner, sufficient to prevent such ignorance or negligence becoming more general than it is at present."

"Such a compromise between the laxity of the old and the stringency of the new law of probate would, I respectfully submit, afford a remedy of a great wrong." (P. 87).

This Society presents the following advantages to the Assured:—

- First.—The security of a large subscribed Capital.
 - Second.—Exemption of the Assured from all liability.
 - Third.—Tables of Premiums calculated on the true law of mortality, expressly for this Office, and affording particular advantages to young lives.
 - Fourth.—Participating and Non-participating Scales of Premiums. In the former the Assured are entitled to EIGHTY PER CENT. or FORTY-FIFTHS of the profits periodically, (without deduction for interest on capital or guarantee fund), either by way of addition to the sum assured, or in diminution of Premium, at the option of the Assured.
 - Fifth.—Policies INDISPUTABLE, except in case of fraud.
 - Sixth.—This Society gives a much larger share of profits to the Assured, and at a lower rate of Premium, than the great majority of other Life Offices.
 - Seventh.—Parties wishing to assure their lives without participating in the profits can do so on a lower scale of Premiums than that of a large proportion of other Offices.
- Assurances may be effected through any respectable Solicitor, or by application to CHARLES JOHN GILL, Secretary.

LONDON, DECEMBER 28, 1850.

THE near approach of quarter sessions induces us to resume our summary of cases decided by the Court of Criminal Appeal*.

Arrest.—It is an important question, whether a person is justified in slaying one whom he knows to be guilty of felony, and whose arrest he cannot otherwise effect. The rule seems to be, that if a person, having actually committed a felony, will not suffer himself to be arrested, but stand on his defence or flee, so that he cannot possibly be apprehended by those who pursue him, he may lawfully be slain by such as know that he has committed the felony. (See note, 14 Jur., part 1, p. 1052, and authorities there cited). But if this fact be not known to them, they are not justified. (Reg. v. Dadson, 14 Jur., part 1, p. 1051). In that case a constable, who was employed to guard a copse from which wood had been stolen, saw a man come out of the copse carrying wood; the man, on being called to, ran away, whereupon the constable shot him in the leg. The constable was held, by the Court of Criminal Appeal, to be properly convicted of shooting with intent to do grievous bodily harm, as, at the time he fired, the fact that a felony had been committed was unknown to him, although the man was proved to have been guilty of a felony in stealing the wood.

Autrefois acquit.—Whether an acquittal upon an indictment for murder can be successfully pleaded to an indictment for an assault, which was included in the former indictment, but which did not cause the death of the deceased, is not yet decided, the Court of Criminal Appeal differing in their opinion upon the case of the Birds, and having directed it to be re-argued next term.

Forgery.—The prisoner was indicted for uttering the following instrument:—"Pleas to sen by bearer a quantity of basket nails, a clasp, for E. Lloyd;" which was described as a warrant, order, and request for the delivery of goods, and was set out in some of the counts. The prisoner had been employed by Mr. Lloyd, who was a customer of the prosecutor. It was objected, that, as the indictment alleged the document to be a warrant, order, and request, it was necessary that it should be all three, and that it was not an order within the statute, as the person to whom it was addressed was not bound to obey it. The Court of Criminal Appeal decided, that the instrument having been set out in hæc verba, and proved as laid, the prisoner was properly convicted. (Reg. v. Williams, 14 Jur., part 1, p. 1052). See Reg. v. Gilchrist (Car. & M. 232) and Reg. v. Mary Williams, (2 Car. & K. 51). In the latter case Wightman, J., held, that an instrument described in the indictment as a warrant and order, must be both, although it was set out in the indictment; but there the instrument was decided to be a warrant only, though not an order. From that case also, and from Reg. v. Newton, (2 Moo. C. C. 59), the document in question would appear to be only a request, and not a warrant or order.

Marriage.—An important case has lately been before the Court of Criminal Appeal, upon the right of a bigamyman to require that persons, who request him to marry them, should first express a desire to be confirmed; but as the Court held that there was not a sufficient tender of the parties for marriage, and that the indictment was bad in not shewing that the man and woman were parties who might lawfully be married, the main question was not decided. (Reg. v. Moorhouse James, Clerk, 14 Jur., part 1, p. 940).

Practice.—In our former article on this subject (ante, p. 242) we said that it had been decided in Ireland, that a prisoner might plead over after demurring to an indictment for a felony; (Reg. v. Duffy, 4 Cox, 24); but that it had been ruled to the contrary in this country, in Reg. v. Faiderman, at the Central Criminal Court. Since then we find that Erle, J., has held that the judgment on demurrer in such cases is final. His Lordship said that the subject had received his most particular attention, and his opinion agreed with that of the late Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas; and that although, in cases where the life of a prisoner was at stake, it had been the practice to allow a prisoner to plead over, yet at all events, in other cases, it was not expedient to allow this as a matter of course. (Reg. v. Hendy, 4 Cox, 244. The prisoner was indicted for sending a threatening letter).

Receiving of stolen Goods.—An indictment, in the first count, charged the prisoner with larceny, on which the jury found a verdict of not guilty. In a subsequent count he was charged with having received the goods "so as aforesaid feloniously stolen," on which the jury found a verdict of guilty. The Court of Criminal Appeal held, on motion in arrest of judgment, that there was no repugnancy; and that although the word "aforesaid," in a subsequent count, virtually incorporated all the necessary averments as to time and place in the former count, the words of reference here did not necessarily mean that the goods so received had been stolen by the person named in the first count, but only that they had been before then stolen by some person. (Reg. v. Craddock, 14 Jur., part 1, p. 1031). This objection, however, was held good when it was taken before verdict. (Reg. v. Woolford, 1 Moo. & R. 384, coram Patteson, J.)

In the late case of *Reg. v. Wiley the facts were, that two men (Williamson and Strachan) had stolen fowls; they took them in a bag to the house of Wiley's father, and thence Strachan carried the bag, accompanied by Williamson and Wiley, the latter carrying a light, into the stable of Wiley, who had exclusive control over the stable, and who was to purchase the fowls; but before anything was done the police went in, and found the bag, unopened, lying on the floor, and the three prisoners standing around. Not a word was said. The two were indicted for stealing, and Wiley for receiving. The question was, whether possession had passed to Wiley, so as to render him a receiver in point of law. The Court differed in opinion, but a majority held, that, under the circumstances, he could not be convicted of receiving.

Soldier.—It has lately been decided, that a soldier may be indicted, and if convicted imprisoned, for disobeying an order of two justices for the payment of money for the maintenance of his bastard child. It was contended, that, being a soldier, he was exempt from imprisonment for such an offence, which was rather of a civil than criminal character; and also, that an indictment would not lie for disobeying the order of two justices. The Court, however, overruled both objections. (Reg. v. Arthur Ferrall, Dec. 20, 1850, not yet reported).

We have been requested to publish the following:—

TO J. E. DOWDESWELL, Esq.

London, Nov. 28, 1850.

Sir,—The undersigned Solicitors beg leave, on your retirement from the office of Master of the High Court of Chancery, to express the deep sense which they feel of the great ability and discretion with which you have discharged your important duties for the long period of upwards of thirty years, and at the same time to acknowledge the marked courtesy which they and their branch of the Profession have invariably experienced at your hands:—

Gentlemen,—I beg that you and the very respectable members of the Profession whose signatures are affixed to the letter which I had yesterday the honour to receive, will accept my sincere thanks for the very flattering terms in which that letter is expressed.

If I have been enabled to perform the duties of the office which I recently filled to the satisfaction of your branch of the Profession, it is to be attributed, in a great measure, to the knowledge, skill, and ability of those who have been in the habit of attending me. I am not aware that I can claim any merit for having treated the gentlemen so attending me with any marked courtesy, but should this have been the case, it has been owing to the civility and attention which I uniformly received from them, and which I considered entitled them to be treated by equal civility and attention from me. With sincere wishes for your health and happiness, I remain, most faithfully yours,

J. E. DOWDESWELL

Review.

Practical Remarks upon the injurious Operation of the Wills Act in Respect to the Execution of Wills; with Suggestions for its Amendment. By an Advocate in Doctors' Commons. [William Benning & Co., 1850.]

The author of the pamphlet will probably be obliged to us for calling his attention to the following striking and judicious remarks—made by Mr. Hayes on the new law very shortly after it was passed:—

"With respect to the policy of the new law, as regards the execution and attestation of wills, opinions differ widely. There was wisdom, perhaps, in establishing one invariable mode of authentication; but then a form designed for common use (personal property being more or less freely bestowed on every man) should have been of the simplest kind, and have been prescribed in the most unambiguous language. There is just reason to apprehend, that, from the total neglect of both these considerations, many involuntary intestacies will occur, and much hardship be consequently inflicted. While the range of testamentary volition is enlarged, its convenient exercise is crippled. The facilities afforded by the old law of testaments (as distinguished from the law of devises) for the final arrangement of a man's affairs, at a moment when ceremony would be impertinent; for the unsuspected diversion of his bounty into new channels, when secrecy may be prudence, or even a higher virtue; for the indulgence of an inclination, which statutes may thwart, but can never extinguish, to add, alter, obliterate, restore, as prosperous or untoward fortune, broken friendships, returning kindness, or, perhaps, fancy may dictate—all these must now be exchanged, by the great body of the people, for certain rigid observances; and the general feeling, so long enjoyed, of perfect testamentary freedom, as regards personal property—that ever-fluctuating mass, demanding instant means to meet the new circumstances which its fluctuations create—must be succeeded by a general feeling of restraint. Such is the contracted character of laws, when legislation, selecting and magnifying a few cases of fraud, folly, or oppression, and studious chiefly to hit those partial blots, which it as often misses, forgets what ought to be its higher aim, the general convenience, and vainly labours to establish a system of civil discipline in the ordinary concerns of life. The principles which really guard the exercise of the proprietary right against injurious excess, and which place the great interests of society, as respects property, beyond the reach of individual caprice, are to be found in the law which governs the settlement of estates; within the limits prescribed by the policy of that law, the disposing power should be allowed to exert itself as freely as possible. It often happened, under the old law, that a will was void, as to freehold estates, from the non-observance of the statutory requisite of three witnesses, but that the heir, unable to reconcile the legal right with the moral obligation, gave effect to the declared intention of the testator. So general and inveterate is the impression as to the validity of unattested wills of personal estate, and so disproportionate and unsuitable are the ceremonies imposed to the circumstances of the great majority of testators*, that next of kin may be placed, yet more frequently, in the same delicate position; and whether interest or good feeling shall prevail, the policy of the Legislature will be equally condemned. Two witnesses were required, under the notion that litigation would be greatly diminished if informal and imperfect papers were no longer admissible to probate; but the requisition, except so far as it may operate to diminish the number of valid wills, will hardly realise that expectation. Wills complying, but barely complying, with the forms prescribed by the act, may be most informal papers; so easy is it to multiply ceremonies—so difficult, where the public feeling and convenience are not in unison with the spirit of their institution, to secure their solemn observance. The testator and both* the witnesses may be marksmen; in short, the will may be well executed by making three blots, without disclosing the character of the instrument, without any clause of attestation, and perhaps without any really attesting witness. Nor would formality of execution, if formality could be enforced, insure accuracy of expression, for it is familiar, that very ill-penned wills are often executed and attested in the most orderly manner; questions of construction would probably bear the same proportion as before to the number of effective instruments, and, in consequence of the increased resort to advisers who have acquired legal forms without legal ideas, prove, perhaps, the more embarrassing, because springing from the worst source of obscurity—an unskilful use of technical language. Since acts of Parliament cannot endue men with business-like habits, the same class of persons who made loose memoranda before, will make them still, and frequent intestacies, to be silently endured, will be substituted for the litigation, more obtrusive, but less injurious, which occasionally sprung from imperfect papers, and was, indeed, the natural result of a free volition universally exercised. But even if the effects were fully answerable to the views of the framers, still it might be asked, why society at large should be deprived of a portion of its rational liberty for the protection of the improvident few, or for greater ease of the judicature? One consequence of the newly-imposed ceremonies will probably be to multiply the number of codicils—those dangerous appendages, but which will now be made the vehicles of small bequests liable to frequent alteration†." (1 Hayes's Introduction to Conveyancing, 367).

However, the learned and ingenious author of this pamphlet, in his zeal in advocating the rights, and protesting against what he terms the legal robbery, of legatees, appears to us rather to overlook that the question has another side—to forget that if cases of great hardship may, and undoubtedly do, occur towards deserving objects of a testator's bounty, there is no class of human beings, nay, of creeping things, more vile, less deserving of any indulgence in the construction of a statute, than the class of legacy-hunters—still more, than the class in whose favour testators often avail themselves of that absolute power which the law of this country gives to divert landed property out of its legitimate and equitable channel. A man marries an heiress, and becomes somehow, at her death without issue, absolute owner of her estates. Instead of giving them or letting them go to the heir-at-law of the family who had acquired or purchased those estates, of the same stock with his wife, the last just holder, as well as with the first purchaser, he leaves them by his will to some friend of his own, who may or may not be a just and honourable man. In all such cases, and they are many, in addition to the very large class of ordinary legacy-hunting vermin cases, who shall say that a Court of justice, that a Court of equity, may not be, nay, ought not to be, even astute to discover legal, technically legal, reasons for setting aside the will? The author of the pamphlet is rather an advocate of the legatees; we are, we own, inclined to think the robbery of the heirs and next of kin the greater hardship. While he calls it (p. 74) "a mere sophism in morals" to allow the conscience, like the Courts, to act upon a "fallacious presumption of law," he says nothing of the moral duties of legatees or devisees to give up their ill-gotten property to the rightful owners; and he endeavours to wrest Paley's opinion to his side, though it is directly the other way as to real estate; and as to personal estate, which a man has acquired by his own labour, Paley only says, generally, he may give it to whom he pleases. Paley does not say that a legatee may honourably keep what some one has left him, to the detriment of a son, a nephew, or even a more distant relative. Suppose a bad-hearted madman (and there are many such who have not been legally declared incapable of managing their own affairs) takes it into his phantom-haunted brain to disinherit his son or nephew, or even a more distant heir, who, however, is the heir of those from whom his property came to him, the writer says nothing of the "sophism in morals," which allows the conscience to keep property so acquired. Men of high honour, indeed, do not keep it. There are such, but unfortunately they are few, and the high public morality of the Legislature should enable the Court to set aside such wills.

* "The inconvenience of requiring the presence of two witnesses is very trifling, and it will be unnecessary to let them know that they are attesting a will." (Fourth Report of Real Property Commissioners). Now, as the act requires the joint presence of the witnesses, and as it would not be safe to dispense with subscription by them simul et semel, may not the inconvenience be great, and is not the very peculiarity of the ceremony equivalent to actual publication?"

* See Prest. Shep. Touch. 434.

† "The law would be rendered more simple, if the execution of deeds and wills were governed by similar rules." (Tyrrell's Suggestions, 167). Again, "More than one witness should not be necessary to the validity of any will, and he should not be required to sign in the presence of the testator." (Ib.)

These considerations, however, are altogether apart and distinct from the question of rendering the intention of the Legislature passably intelligible. For as to Montesquieu's principle of legislation cited by the author, that "it is an essential article that the words of the laws should excite in everybody the same ideas," it is simply impossible, till man's nature as well as man's language are made very different from what they are at present. For, not to urge that the clearest exposition may fail for want of perspicuity in the mind of the recipient, what human composition out of pure mathematics has escaped being the subject of controversy, if human interests and human passions were concerned? Without going further, let the writer but take the advice of Dr. Johnson, and "attend to Lydiat's life and Galileo's end." Nay, Hobbes has given it as his opinion—and he was haud sordidus auctor—that had it been contrary to certain powerful human interests that the three angles of a triangle should be equal to two right angles, that proposition would have been fiercely disputed. LONDON, JANUARY 4, 1851.

In our paper on the subject of Chancery reform of the 21st December, 1850, we did not touch upon the subject of the different kinds of bills which are now considered requisite, and the mode in which the great complexity arising out of that part of our procedure may be remedied. And here, before proceeding further, we must apprise our readers, that, as we are not the Chancery commissioners, we do not intend or pretend to suggest a complete set of orders or rules, but only to throw together such observations on the principles which we think should regulate equity pleading, with the occasional consequential suggestions of details, as have occurred to us, as the result of some experience and much reflection.

Now, as to different kinds of bills, we have at present, first, the original bill; secondly, the amended bill, applicable to the suggestion of facts which were in existence, and either known or not known, at the time of filing the bill; thirdly, the bill of revivor, for setting on a suit rendered defective by death and some other uses; fourthly, the supplemental bill, for suggesting facts occurring after the filing of the original bill; fifthly, the compounds of the several bills. And it is well known, that to file one of these bills, when it ought to have been, in point of form, one of the others, is to subject the draftsman to the annoyance of a demurrer, and the client to an expense ranging between 50% and 100%. Is there any necessity whatever for so many kinds of bills? We apprehend not. The sole object of a bill is to apprise the defendant, before the cause is issued, what is the case made and intended to be proved by the plaintiff. Now, that the plaintiff should at liberty, under certain restrictions, to put on the record all the facts material to him, whether they existed before he first filed his bill or occurred after, is conceded; but it is wholly immaterial, except as a matter of purely practical convenience, whether he does so by an addition to the original bill, or by a substantive bill. What we suggest, therefore, on this head, is, to abolish all distinctions subsequently to the filing of the original bill; to permit any material matter, whensoever or howsoever arising, to be added to the record, either by indorsement on the original bill or by a rider, at the choice and convenience of the plaintiff; and that no particular form should be required for such addition to the record, provided it be plainly expressed, and conform to the general rules regulating the frame of the original bill.

Another grave defect in principle, as we conceive, in our equity procedure, is the extraordinary sanctity attributed to the answer. A plaintiff moves for production of documents, for payment of money into court, for an injunction, &c. He must take all his facts upon certain points from the defendant's answer; he may be ready to bring twenty witnesses to contradict the answer; they cannot be heard; upon the statements contained in the answer he must proceed. A case recently occurred in which the plaintiff's title to an injunction depended on the question, whether a certain custom of trade existed; if it did, an implied contract arose on the part of the defendant; if it did not, there was no such contract. The defendant swore (no doubt believing it to be true) that there was no such custom. The plaintiff was ready with several witnesses to prove the custom. The Court avoided deciding that the affidavits were inadmissible, but it refused the injunction; and as the injunction would have been pretty clearly grantable if the plaintiff's evidence had been received, (because it was overwhelming in amount, and the credit of the witnesses was not impeached), it was, in effect, the defendant's answer which settled the question. Now, this rule works infinite injustice, and is, in itself, quite without rational principle. When a defendant reads his own answer as evidence, he is simply a witness, and there is no reason why he should be believed more than any other witness. The sound rule would, we apprehend, be, that on all interlocutory applications the plaintiff's affidavits (if affidavits are retained at all as evidence in contested cases) should be received to contradict the answer, giving the defendant liberty to require the attendance of any witness to cross-examine him, if he thought fit, in open court; and the defendant should also be subject to cross-examination on all such parts of his answer as he chooses to read as evidence; for although it would probably be oppressive to compel a defendant to submit to a vivâ voce examination against himself, yet if he chooses to tender himself as a witness on his own behalf, he cannot justly complain that his evidence should be tested in the same manner as that of any other witness.

VOL. XIV.

But it may be further matter for very grave consideration, whether, in at least some interlocutory applications, evidence by affidavit should be used at all, or whether in such cases a vivâ voce examination of witnesses should not always be resorted to.

Take the case of a contested motion to restrain a railroad company from erecting a particular bridge, or executing any other particular work; the allegation being, that, as executed, it is not within the company's power. In these cases there is generally a pile of affidavits on the one side shewing that the work is constructed in a given way, and a pile of counter affidavits shewing that it is constructed in quite a different way; on such evidence the Court is usually driven to send the case to law, for an action or an issue*: whereas, if the witnesses on both sides were examined and cross-examined vivâ voce, the Court would be able at once to decide. Now, why should not a Court of equity so proceed? Two statements, and two only, have we ever heard advanced as reasons. First, it is said that Chancery has always proceeded on written evidence; secondly, that to proceed otherwise would take up too much of the time of the Court. The first statement is simply of a fact; it is obviously no reason at all, and we shall pass it by. The second is more specious than sound. If it be meant that the trial of a motion for an injunction on vivâ voce evidence would take longer than it does as now heard on affidavit, that is probably, in general, true; but if it be meant that more time would be consumed in doing business, that, we apprehend, is not true. For it must not be forgotten, that every motion on which no order is made, merely liberty to bring an action being given, or an action being directed, is in effect an abortive motion—a pure waste of judicial time. The judge might as well have been sitting in his own library, reading for his own amusement, as far as the dispatch of business is concerned. He has simply been applying his judicial faculties for a given number of hours, to find out that he has no power to decide anything. Whereas, if motions were heard in the mode suggested, it is probable that in nine out of ten cases a decision would be at once pronounced; because the real difficulty felt by a judge in equity is very rarely on the question of law, but almost always on the question of fact. What we should suggest, therefore, for the consideration of the commissioners on this point is the proposition, that, on all motions opposed on the facts, affidavits should not be received, but that the witnesses should be examined vivâ voce, as they now are in an action.

We now approach a question, not of procedure, but of practice—one of considerable delicacy, but one on which, as the Court has hitherto interfered to make regulations, it should again interfere to make fresh regulations, when the data on which its former ones were founded have been altered. We allude to the mode of regulating the taxation of counsel's fees and solicitors' costs. Hitherto, equity having proceeded wholly by writing, and according to certain fixed forms, which were never short, the length of the writings formed a sufficiently convenient mode of calculating the extent of labour of the professional man; and though it was very absurd in theory to measure the remuneration of either counsel or solicitors, not by the difficulty of their work and the skill with which it was done, but by the quantity of paper covered with writing before them, still, in practice, the plan worked tolerably well. But now that a new system has commenced—which will, beyond all question, be more completely elaborated—according to which the quantity of writing will be, on a moderate calculation, reduced to one-fourth of what it used to be, and according to which there will be no regular average quantity of writing in any given kind of case, the old rules of taxation are manifestly inapplicable, and must be abolished.

The subject is not without difficulty, but the difficulty consists chiefly in considering the profession of a lawyer as essentially different from any other profession. If it be borne in mind that a lawyer, in either branch of the Profession, is, after all, but a man who works with his head and hands, in a given branch of knowledge, and that the true measure of the remuneration due to him, is the time during which he labours, having regard to the difficulty and perfection of his work, it will not be difficult to perceive that a reasonable rule may be arrived at for estimating that remuneration, even although the work be not done in the form of so many folios written or read.

The principle, then, of the rule that we should suggest would be this—that the time occupied, having regard to the nature of the work and the skill required for it, should be the measure of the fees and costs allowed on taxation.

* The same may be said of motions to restrain infringement of patents, which have been almost entirely driven out of the Court of Chancery, by the difficulty of determining the facts of novelty, of infringement, and of sufficiency of description in the specification, upon affidavits. In the days when such motions used still to be made, it was common to have two days in Chancery occupied upon affidavits in determining nothing, and afterwards to find the very same questions determined at law upon oral evidence in one day. The same difficulty occurs where the motion is for purely equitable relief, as where it is for relief in aid of a legal right. If the facts are complicated, the Court is compelled to decide with insufficient materials, or to direct an issue.

For this purpose the office of the Taxing Masters would require to be remodelled; they should not be all solicitors, nor all counsel, but a mixed tribunal of counsel and solicitors; so that what should be allowed on taxation might be determined upon in each case, by a person of competent knowledge; and the rule by which the Taxing Masters should be directed to govern themselves, should be by reference to the difficulty of the business and the time alleged to be, or judged to be, requisite for it. At first, no doubt, such a system of taxation would be found a little troublesome to work. Taxing Masters would have to read the papers in disputed cases, to judge whether the costs and fees claimed were fair or not; but, after a little experience, we are convinced that the Masters would acquire a practical skill in estimating the amount of time requisite to execute any given piece of business, and the value of that time fairly estimated with regard to the just claims of all parties, which would enable them, in the great majority of cases, to decide with as much regularity as they now do.

A Practical Treatise on the Law of Contracts not under Seal, and upon the usual Defences to Actions thereon. By JOSEPH CHITTY, Jun., Esq. The Fourth Edition, by JOHN A. RUSSELL, B.A., of Gray's Inn, Barrister at Law. Royal 8vo., pp. 919. [Sweet.]

Almost every work bearing the name of a Chitty is adapted, in its design at least, to supply some professional want of daily occurrence, and bears in its details the impress of practical judgment and unwearying industry. The scientific merits of the various volumes which compose the great Chitty library are more diversified, though none of them reach a very high standard. The late author of the popular work before us endeavoured to render it "not only an elaborate and complete treatise on the principles of the law of contracts, illustrated and explained by practical cases, but also a useful Nisi Prius book on the very many important subjects which it embraces." In the latter part of his design he is acknowledged to have been eminently successful; the clear arrangement of the subjects, the practical mode of treatment, and the concise statements of the facts of the leading cases, rendered the work a most efficient Nisi Prius hand-book. Towards the elucidation of principles, the author did little more than state with sufficient exactness the results of the various decisions that came under his notice. When two cases were in conflict, he pointed out the fact, but did little or nothing to help his reader to the better conclusion on points left unsettled by the balance of authorities, though in his preface he claimed credit for an attempt "to reconcile decisions apparently of a conflicting nature, and to point out those cases which seemed not to be supported by principle." This subservience to individual cases and neglect of general principles gave rise to a defect of logical continuity in the development of the subject, and impressed upon the work the character rather of a very elaborate digest than of a scientific treatise.

Mr. Russell has evidently been sensible of the deficiency on the part of his author which we have pointed out, for he has not contented himself with incorporating in the work the substance of the recent statutes and decisions, and making room for his additions by a judicious abridgement of the original text, but has re-written a considerable part of the work, and interwoven a continuous reference to, and recapitulation of, general principles, which makes the book as readable as it could well be made, without impairing its completeness for practical purposes.

Mr. Russell has much increased the utility of the book for the purpose of reference, by adding marginal notes or abstracts of the contents of the several paragraphs—a matter of detail apparently trifling, but the neglect of which seriously impairs the utility of many excellent works.

The following summary of the principal contents of the work will shew how many questions of hourly occurrence are embraced within its range. Indeed, Chitty on Contracts and Sugden on Vendors and Purchasers may fairly be said to supply half the wants of an attorney's office.

Sect. 2. Of the form and construction of contracts—Oral contracts and parol evidence.

Sect. 3. Of stamping agreements.

Chap. 2.—Sect. 1. Of persons incompetent to contract, or protected from liability on their engagements. Persons insane—intoxicated. Infants—Married women—Aliens—Outlaws—Bankrupts—Insolvents—Durees.

Sect. 2. Of principal and agent. Master and servant—Partners—Assignees of a bankrupt or of an insolvent—Executors and administrators—Corporations—Government agents—Commissioners of roads &c.—Trustees—Parish officers.

Chap. 3.—Sect. 1. Contracts for the purchase of real property. Statute of Frauds—Contracts between landlord and tenant as to tenancy, repairs, taxes, notice to quit, fixtures, away-going crops—Use and occupation &c.

Sect. 2. Contracts for the sale and exchange of goods. Statute of Frauds—Fraudulent sales—Illegal sales—Rights of vendor and vendee—Warranty—Composition in lieu of tithes—Bailments—Carriers—Wagers—Guaranties and indemnities—Discharge of sureties.

Sect. 3. Contract to marry.

Sect. 4. Contracts for services and works.

Sect. 5. Contracts respecting money. Money lent—Money paid for defendant's use—Money had and received—Interest—Account stated.

Chap. 4.—Sect. 1. Contracts illegal at common law, as being immoral, contrary to public policy, or fraudulent.

Sect. 2. Contracts void by statute. Usury—Gaming and horse-racing—Stock-jobbing—Illegal companies or associations—Sales of offices—Contracts made on Sundays—Illegal charges on benefices.

Chap. 5. Of the usual defences to actions on simple contracts. Performance, and excuses for non-performance—Payment—Award and satisfaction—Taking of negotiable security—Release by act of the party, or operation of law—Another action pending, or judgment recovered—Arbitration and award—Tender—Statute of Limitations—Set-off—Infancy—Coverture—Bankruptcy and certificate—Discharge under the Insolvent Act.

Chap. 6. Of the damages recoverable in assumpsit, and herein of a penalty and liquidated damages.

A Practical Treatise on Benefit Building Societies, embracing their Origin, Constitution, and Change of Character, and the Superiority of Permanent over Terminating Societies. Also the Principles and Practice of Tontine Building Companies, Freehold Land Societies, &c., and the Law relating to those Societies; with the Statutes and Cases to the present Time. Also Rules, Forms, and Precedents of Freehold, Copyhold, and Leasehold Securities, with Practical Notes. By WILLIAM STONE, Attorney-at-Law. 12mo., pp. 328.

[Maxwell.]

We have already noticed Mr. Scratchley's valuable work on those considerations respecting the constitution, business, and accounts of building societies, which are within the province of an actuary, to the merits of which Mr. Stone fairly bears testimony in the following terms:—"On the subject of compound interest, and on all matters connected with accounts and calculations as regards these societies, the very able treatise of Mr. Scratchley will be found of the utmost use, and as a work of reference is indispensable." On all other questions relating to building societies Mr. Stone's work appears to us to be the best that has been published. He is evidently fond of his subject, and enters into the history and economy of building societies with great animation, and a strong desire to extend the knowledge and use of this modern contrivance for making the most of small savings and small securities. The mode of working a building society, and the relative advantages of the different schemes which have been invented, are explained in a very clear and satisfactory manner; but we think the whole of the picture wears a little too much of the rosy tint, and investors are not sufficiently cautioned to exercise the most vigilant scrutiny into the fidelity, judgment, and conduct of their surveyors and professional advisers.

From our author's commendation of Tontine building schemes in general, and of the Folkestone Tontine Building Company in particular, we entirely dissent. The name of Lorenzo Tonti should go down to posterity with that of the inventor of lotteries, and equally dishonoured. A tontine creates gratuitously a risk and uncertainty of the very same kind with those which, when they necessarily arise from the nature of things, an insurance is intended to compensate and neutralise. It is the opposite of an insurance, and is as noxious as an insurance is beneficial. If the Folkestone scheme has been a source of profit to all parties concerned, it is due, not to the tontine folly associated with it, but to the extraordinary development of the resources of the place by the traffic on the South-eastern Railway.

Mr. Stone includes Freehold Land Societies in the scope of his work, but he does not do justice to the subject; and, indeed, seems to have as undue a prejudice against those undertakings as he has in favour of tontines. The specific objections to them, whether legal or prudential, do not very clearly appear from Mr. Stone's remarks, which remind us of Dr. Primrose's ambiguous comments on his wife's hopeful prognostications.

The principal contents of the book are as follows:—

Part I.—Chap. 1. Introductory observations.—Chap. 2. The origin, progress, and constitution of Benefit Building Societies.—Distinction between terminating and permanent societies, &c.—Chap. 3. Of the formation and constitution of Benefit Building Societies.—Chap. 4. General remarks on the advantage of Building Societies, both to investors and to borrowers.—Chap. 5. Proposed extension to personal property.

Part II.—Chap. 1. Of Tontine Building Societies.—Chap. 2. Of Freehold Land Societies.—Chap. 3. Of societies established to erect buildings.—Chap. 4. Proposed extension of the principle of the Building Societies Act.

Part III.—Chap. 1. Practical observations on the law relating to Benefit Building Societies, &c., including so much of the law of Friendly Societies as is applicable to them.—Chap. 2. The law as to the qualification to vote in respect of property mortgaged to such societies.—Chap. 3. The statutes.

Part IV.—Chap. 1. Precedent of rules for a permanent society.—Chap. 2. Forms for a permanent society.—Chap. 3. Precedents of securities on freehold, copyhold, and leasehold property.

The following extract will recommend at once the work and the subject:—

Investors' Advantages.—"In the first place, these institutions enable persons in the industrious and middle classes of society to save money, by the payment of small periodical instalments, in so convenient a manner that the sums so paid are scarcely missed; and in the course of a short time, by the gradual accumulation of these payments at compound interest, a considerable sum is realised for any purpose to which the investor may wish to apply it. And the investor has the great advantage of withdrawing his money at any time when it is likely to prove most useful, and he can then take new shares, and begin to save again.

"Previously to the establishment of these institutions, the only modes by which interest could be made of money were by means of the savings banks for small sums, and by means of the public funds for larger sums. About 3½ per cent. is the highest rate of interest which can be made by these means, and then only after a sufficient sum has been saved to make it worth while to invest it; whereas these societies pay at least 5½ per cent. compound interest, commencing on small instalments, and without the necessity for previous savings. The moment the first subscription is paid by a shareholder, he has the satisfaction of knowing it begins to be productive.

"The monthly subscriptions on shares of 25*l.* are so small that they are quite within the means of mechanics, artisans, domestic servants, and others in a similar class of life, who have hitherto been in the habit of placing their savings in the savings banks.

"The usual monthly subscription for a share of 25*l.* in permanent societies is 3*s.* 3*d.*, amounting yearly to the sum of 1*l.* 19*s.* These subscriptions, continued for ten years certain, by which time they will amount to 19*l.* 10*s.*, will entitle the investing member to 25*l.*; consequently he will realise 5*l.* 10*s.* in addition to the subscriptions which he has from time to time paid, which sum amounts in fact to 5½ per cent. compound interest; and if in the mean time he desires to withdraw his money from the society, he can do so at any time on giving a short notice, and he will then receive interest up to that period, in addition to the amount of his subscriptions; and, as before stated, he can then begin to save again. Now, this is a mode of saving money which may be recommended by masters of large establishments to their assistants, by the masters and mistresses of families to their servants and dependents, and by the ministers of religion to their congregations. Nothing is more truly charitable and wise than to induce those over whom we possess influence, by judicious and well-timed advice, to become the architects of their own future prosperity and comfort, by a prudent economy, and the fostering of provident habits when the opportunity offers. In fact, the same reasons which have caused the savings banks to do so much good in this respect apply with greater force to these institutions, because they are more extensive in their operation.

"Then, again, they afford to the members of the learned professions, to independent gentlemen of moderate fortunes, the superior class of tradesmen, and others in the middle class of life, the opportunity of gradually and with ease accumulating a fund to place out children in professions or trades, for marriage portions, for fines on leases, for the purchase of businesses or partnerships, and for many similar purposes." (P. 44).

Borrowers' Advantages.—"As a general rule, 5l. per cent. interest is charged on sums not exceeding 1000l. or 1200l.; that being about the range taken by building societies. Sometimes, however, sums from 500l. to 1200l. may be obtained at 4l. and 4l. 10s. per cent. interest on good landed security. Hitherto building societies have had but little to do with securities on land, because they have been established in populous districts, with the intention of advancing money on house property; therefore, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, where money has been advanced by a building society, it may be assumed, that if the advance had been obtained from a private individual, only half the value would have been lent, and 5l. per cent. interest would have been charged, payable half-yearly.

"Taking, therefore, for granted, that interest at 5l. per cent. is charged on ordinary mortgages of house property not exceeding 1200l., the two modes of borrowing money may be tested in the following manner on a sum of 100l. for ten years:—

Ten years' interest at 5l. per cent.	50	0	0
	£150	0	0
Yearly payments to a permanent society, at 1l. 2s. 6d. a month..	£13	10	0
Multiply by ten years.....	10
Balance in favour of society, less commission..	£15	0	0

"The same result will arise on an advance on the sum of 100l. for fourteen years:—

Private advance of	£100	0	0
Fourteen years' interest, at 5l. per cent.	70	0	0
	£170	0	0
Yearly payments to a permanent society, at 18s. a month	£10	16	0
Multiply by fourteen years.....	14

"The foregoing instances are decidedly in favour of building societies. They shew, however, the actual payments only made by the borrower for principal and interest on the sum advanced, without allowing anything for compound interest either way; and inasmuch as the half-yearly payments of interest on a private mortgage are less than the repayments or subscriptions to a building society, the amount of compound interest would be considerably in favour of the private mortgage, if it were assumed that the borrower could make compound interest on the small instalments paid to the society. But this cannot be fairly assumed. On the contrary, it may reasonably be supposed that such small sums of money would from time to time lie idle and unproductive, and at the best could only be made productive at 3l. per cent. in the funds, with considerable inconvenience and expense.

"The consequence is, that in effect the borrower does not pay a higher, if so high a rate of interest in these societies, as he does by raising money on private mortgage; although, for the purposes of strict calculation, and on the assumption that money will always make compound interest, it is stated, in the calculations relating to these societies, that the borrowers pay 6l. or 7l. per cent.

"But even if it were allowed that a borrower pays a higher rate of interest to these societies than is customary on mortgages, still the advantages greatly preponderate in favour of the former.

"No one ought to borrow money without considering in what way he shall redeem it or pay it back again. If a person be careless and thoughtless with reference to this important rule, the evil day will be sure to arrive sooner or later, when either he or his family will suffer the consequences of his improvidence, in the sacrifice of his property, by a forced sale or otherwise. If a person builds or purchases property which will pay him eight or ten per cent. on his outlay, it will be very easy for him to pay five per cent. for the money which he has borrowed on a mortgage of it, and treat the rest as profit. He may go on pleasantly enough for a few years, keeping the interest pretty regularly paid, but the time comes when the principal money is required by the lender, which often happens when it is difficult to obtain money; and if otherwise, there is at least the expense of a transfer to another person. It occurs, however, too frequently, that the property is sacrificed, or a great loss sustained." (P. 47).

"It may be said that this is in the nature of things, and cannot be avoided; but it is manifest that building societies are the exact remedy for this evil: by joining them, a person is constrained, as it were, to be provident, and he redeems his property from necessity. Instead of appropriating the surplus rents to support a more expensive mode of living, they must be applied, either voluntarily or compulsorily, towards making good the payments to the society, which, in the course of a few years, have the effect of releasing the property from any incumbrance." (P. 51).

"By obtaining money from a building society, a borrower has the additional advantage of being quite as independent and free from the caprice of others as he was beforehand. All he has to do is to provide with care for the periodical subscriptions payable to the society, and all further anxiety is avoided. These societies are now constituted in such a manner that a borrower may redeem, sell, or let his property at any time with as much or even greater facility than he could if it were privately mortgaged; so that there is no counteracting difficulty in this respect.

"These societies also enjoy another very important advantage, in consequence of their being able, with perfect safety, to advance a much larger sum in proportion to the value of the property, because the borrower at once begins to repay portions of the principal money. Instead of only half the value, three-fourths, and even more, may be safely advanced when required." (P. 52).

MOORE v. GARWOOD. Remarks on the decision of the Court of Exchequer Chamber in that case, 58

MORTGAGEE OF HOUSEHOLD PROPERTY NOT ENTITLED TO INSURE BY EXPRESS CONTRACT.

On his right, in the event of his effecting an insurance without privity of the mortgagor, to add the premiums to his mortgage debt, 221 recent case of Dobson v. Land; ib.
 reasons why the case cannot be supported, ib.
 mortgagee is, at law, the absolute owner of the premises, ib.
 rights conferred on him by this position, ib.
 mortgagee has, on these principles, an insurable interest in the property, 222 his only security is the mortgaged premises, ib.
 to insure, therefore, is merely the natural result of the interest the law confers upon him, ib.
 results which should follow from this state of the law, ib.
 this view confirmed by several authorities, ib.

A SUMMARY OF THE LAW OF MODERN PLEADING, incident to the Rules of Hilary Term, 1834; with such of the Decisions on Practice, Evidence, and Costs, as are closely connected with that subject. Also, copious Analysis of the Cases and Pleadings. By ROBERTS PHILIP TYRWHITT, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

"The Reports of the 'Common-law Commissioners' suggested extensive changes in the practice on this important subject, (Pleading), which changes, whether improvements or not, were sanctioned by Parliament, and embodied by all the common-law courts in general rules, dated Hilary Term, 1834. It was then sought to adapt old principles to modern exigencies, and to link the present with the past by regulating the transition—with what success, the work before us attempts to develop. It embodies in its text the pith of the decisions on 'Modern Pleading,' as incident to the above 'rules,' and condenses in the notes other valuable matter at present spread over lengthy 'reports.' The latter feature is adapted to render the volume more extensively useful in courts of Nisi Prius, particularly on the circuits, and in the library of country practitioners. Nor is it rigorously limited to its chief object, but includes the course of decisions on the replication de injuria in its extended application, as well as on the modern acts respecting land, tithes, mines, commons, ways, and easements, together with so much of the law of amendment, evidence, and costs as elucidates the new rules of pleading. On the whole, this work appears to have been prepared with much care and industry, and will be found to afford in small comparative compass a useful adjunct to the works of Stephen and Chitty."—Times, Oct. 29th, 1846.
